Campbells Soups

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many incidents of scalding at the Campbells Soups factory in King's Lynn have been reported to the Health and Safety Executive in the last five years. [15360]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 19 February 1996]: HSE has obtained Campbells Soups' permission to provide the following date which would not otherwise have been released.

Five incidents of scalding at the Campbells Soups factory in King's Lynn have been reported to the Health and Safety Executive in the five-year period between 1 April 1990 and 31 March 1995.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many incidents of scalding at the Campbells Soups factory in Stratford-on-Avon have been reported to the Health and Safety Executive in the last five years. [15361]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 19 February 1996]: HSE has obtained Campbells Soups' permission to provide the following data which would not otherwise have been released.

One incident of scalding at the Campbells Soups factory in Stratford-upon-Avon has been reported to the Health and Safety Executive between 1 April 1990 and 31 March 1995.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many deaths have been notified to the Health and Safety Executive in respect of persons involved in food manufacturing in plants owned by Campbells Soups in the last five years. [15364]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 19 February 1996]: One fatal accident at Campbells Soups has been reported to the Health and Safety Executive in the last five years.

Construction Industry

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the consequences for the construction industry in the United Kingdom of (a) a minimum wage at a level of £4 an hour and (b) implementation of the social chapter. [15442]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The introduction of a statutory minimum wage and the implementation of the social chapter in the United Kingdom would impose substantial extra costs on British business, which, in turn, would destroy jobs. This would be a double disaster damaging employment and prosperity across the economy, including the construction industry.

TREASURY

North Sea Oil (Tax Revenues)

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount of extra tax revenues that Her Majesty's Treasury would have received from North sea oil companies if no changes had been made in 1983 to the tax regime. [14760]

Mr. Jack: Estimated revenue effects of the changes to petroleum revenue tax in 1983–84 were given in table 4.2 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" for that year. No separate estimates were made of the impact on North sea companies of the corporation tax changes in that year.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16025]

Mrs. Angela Knight: There are no executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Treasury.

Euro

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what budgetary allocations he is making for the financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 for preparations by the Royal Mint to produce coins and banknotes for circulation in the United Kingdom denominated in euros; [16058]

(2) what expenditure he has approved to date for officials of the Royal Mint to attend meetings of European Commission working parties in Brussels to prepare for the introduction of a single European currency; and if he will continue to approve such expenditures for this purpose in the future. [16059]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No specific provision has been made for expenditure by Her Majesty's Treasury on preparations for single currency coins by the Royal Mint. The Royal Mint operates as a trading fund and takes budgeting decisions on a commercial basis. Preparations for single currency notes are the responsibility of the European Monetary Institute, and involve the national central banks of EU member states, including the Bank of England. The Government are committed to playing a full role in preparations for economic and monetary union, given the implications for the UK—including possible commercial opportunities for the Royal Mint—whether or not we participate in the single currency.

Arms (Iraq)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what request Customs and Excise has received from the United States Customs Department since 1989 for assistance in information on involvement of United Kingdom companies with the Atlanta branch of the Banca Nationale del Lavoro in funding arms purchases for Iraq. [16006]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 February 1996]: Requests from the United States Customs Department to Customs and Excise are made under the basis of a memorandum of understanding dated 6 July 1989. Requests and information provided are confidential exchanges solely for the purpose of mutual assistance set out in the memorandum.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review Customs and Excise prosecution policy. [15987]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 19 February 1996]: In the light of lessons learnt from the super-gun, Matrix Churchill and other cases, Customs and Excise has already made improvements in the way in which it handles major prosecutions. Sir Richard Scott makes several further recommendations for improvement; these will be carefully considered as a part of the Government's response to the report.

Value Added Tax

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax is collected annually from the national health service. [15907]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 20 February 1996]: Assuming that the hon. Lady is referring to the total cost to the NHS of VAT, HM Customs and Excise calculates from the data produced by the Central Statistical Office that it is about £1.5 billion.

If the hon. Lady is referring to actual VAT collected from health authorities, output tax in the year ending 31 March 1995 was £69 million. This was offset by repayments of £381 million in respect of input tax and refunds relating to contracted-out services.

VAT paid is taken into account in the allocation of funds to NHS trusts.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much value added tax is collected annually from the sale of pharmaceutical products to the national health service. [15902]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The information requested is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on funding of secure accommodation for young offenders; and what plans he has to transfer responsibility for the funding to the Home Office; [15428]

(2) what is the recidivism rate for young offenders who have been placed in secure accommodation for (a) one month, (b) three months, (c) six months and (d) one year and longer; and what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of secure accommodation placements; [15436]

(3) what is the weekly cost of placement per young offender in each approved secure accommodation venue; and if he will make a statement. [15437]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Nigel Jones, dated 21 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the funding of secure accommodation for young offenders, the effectiveness of secure accommodation, and the cost of the various secure accommodation units.

The Department of Health is responsible for the capital funding of secure accommodation and for its approval and inspection. However, revenue funding for the placement in secure accommodation of offenders convicted under section 53 of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 is a Home Office responsibility having been transferred from the Department of Health on 1 April 1995. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

The information requested on recidivism rates is not available. Limited research on recidivism is contained in Home Office Research and Planning Unit Paper 66, "Juveniles sentenced for serious offences: a comparison of regimes in young offender institutions and local authority community homes", published by the Home Office in 1992. This small scale study found some evidence that section 53 offenders released from secure accommodation did better in terms of reconviction than section 53 offenders released from young offender institutions.

The attached table shows the weekly charge per head for those secure accommodation units in which section 53 offenders have been detained since April 1995.

Children Certificates

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has completed the review of the conditions being put on children certificates by magistrates; and if he will make a statement. [15717]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are continuing to monitor the attaching of conditions to children certificates and expect shortly to be in a position to decide what action is required. I regret that it has not proved possible to move as quickly as originally hoped.

Crime Statistics (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the clear-up rate in

Nottinghamshire for (a) 1991, (b) 1992, (c) 1993, (d) 1994 and (e) 1995 for (i) burglary, (ii) theft and (iii) crimes of violence. [15720]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the table. Information for 1995 is not yet available.

Detention Centres (Immigration)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently held in detention centres in respect of immigration. [16002]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information is available on all persons, excluding non-asylum cases in detention for less than a month, held in immigration service detention centres solely under Immigration Act powers. The number of such persons was 295 on 31 January 1996. This figure excludes persons detained in Prison Service establishments or police cells. Information on non-asylum cases in detention for less than a month is not available centrally.

Carl Bridgewater

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment (a) he and (b) his predecessors made of the evidence of prison officer Kenneth Mann about statements alleged to have been made by Patrick Molloy while awaiting trial for the murder of Carl Bridgewater. [16075]

Mr. Kirkhope: A statement by this officer is one of a number of statements recording admissions by Mr. Molloy, which were taken into account both in the previous consideration of this case and in reaching the provisional conclusions notified on 7 December 1995.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will disclose to solicitors acting for the men convicted of murdering Carl Bridgewater, the statements of the education officer at HMP Gartree relating to Patrick Molloy. [16076]

Mr. Kirkhope: A statement made by a former education officer at Gartree prison was disclosed on 9 June 1995 to the convicted men's solicitor.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department between which dates Patrick Molloy was detained at HMP Winson Green while awaiting trial for the murder of Carl Bridgewater. [16074]

Mr. Kirkhope: The statements of two witnesses indicate that Mr. Molloy was detained in Winson Green prison at some point while awaiting trail, but it has not been possible to find any prison records which confirm this, or to establish the dates.

Political Refugees

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many political refugees from Nigeria are settled in the United Kingdom at the latest available date; and if he will make a statement. [15688]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not available. However, between 1992 and 1994, three Nigerian nationals were granted settlement after having been in the United Kingdom for four years as refugees. During the same period two Nigerian nationals were recognised as refugees and granted asylum. They may apply for settlement after four years.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many political refugees have been accepted into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years at the latest date. [15689]

Mr. Kirkhope: During 1995, 1,295 asylum seekers were granted refugee status. Information on the number of grants of asylum in earlier years is given in table 3.1 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issue 15/95, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Citizenship

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what legislative provisions the spouse of a United Kingdom subject working overseas on a permanent basis may satisfy the criteria for eligibility for naturalisation as a British citizen; and if he will make a statement. [15878]

Mr. Kirkhope: The provisions governing naturalisation of the spouse of a British citizen are set out in sections 6(2) of and schedule 1 to the British Nationality Act 1981. Applicants are required to be:

aged 18 or over and not of unsound mind;

of good character;

married to a British citizen at the time of application;

free of any time limit on their stay in the United Kingdom under the immigration laws on the date of application; and to meet certain conditions regarding residence.

Except where the British citizen is in Crown or designated service, the spouse is required to have lived in the Untied Kingdom during the three years prior to application.

Fire Service College

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent the closure of the Fire Service College. [15855]

Mr. Sackville: The Fire Service College will continue as a next steps agency operating as a trading fund.

Fire Brigades

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to take to ensure that fire brigades throughout the country are adequately funded in 1996–97. [15854]

Mr. Sackville: It is up to each fire authority, in the light of the proposed criteria for council tax capping, to set a budget for 1996–97 which will enable it to comply with its statutory duties under the Fire Services Act 1947.

Prison Education

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been conducted into the relative effectiveness of (a) prison education and (b) behaviour modification courses; and if he will make a statement. [16091]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 21 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about research conducted into the relative effectiveness of (a) prison education and (b) behaviour modification courses.

The available research evidence indicates that programmes can be effective in reducing the risk of re-offending if they are: relevant to the offending of those involved; use methods to which offenders are responsive; provide enough treatment to produce sustained effects; are properly implemented and managed; and are reinforced by compatible work after release. Both prison education and behaviour modification programmes can meet these criteria.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the total cost to public funds of the Metropolitan police in 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [17034]

Mr. Howard: As police authority for the Metropolitan police district. I have approved estimates which provide for net revenue expenditure of £1,716.995 million in 1996–97.

The receiver for the Metropolitan police district is issuing, with my approval, a precept of £49.84 per property in band D of the council tax valuation band for Metropolitan police purposes.

I have discussed the estimates for the Metropolitan police expenditure in 1996–97 with representatives of the London local authority associations.

Mr. Paul Malone

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what authority records in the Home Office, relating to the case of Mr. Paul Malone between the years of 1982 and 1984, were destroyed; and if he will make a statement. [14770]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 February 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Andrew Miller, dated 21 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about records relating to Mr. Paul Malone and under what authority they were destroyed.

Generally Home Office files are selected for retention or destruction in accordance with criteria agreed with the Public Record Office. Papers which are needed on a long term basis for administrative purposes, or because they may be selected for permanent preservation in the Public Record Office, may be kept in the Department for up to 30 years; however in the interest of efficiency, papers which are likely to be of only ephemeral interest are destroyed when they are around 5 years old.

Specific instructions about locally held prison records are set out in Circular Instructions 44/1978 and 23/1990, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [14994]

Mr. Horam: Parliamentary questions are not transferred to non-departmental public bodies. The Department's first agency was established on 1 April 1991.

No parliamentary questions were referred to agencies in the 1991–92 parliamentary Session. Five were referred in the 1992–93 parliamentary Session, two in the 1993–94 Session and 17 in the 1994–95 Session.

Six questions have been referred to date in the 1995–96 Session.

Hospitals (Patient Deaths)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases have been reported in each health authority in each of the last five years of patients dying after hospital admission but before being found a bed. [15895]

Mr. Horam: The information is not available centrally.

Senior Mangers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will investigate the extent of the practice of NHS trusts and health authorities raising senior management salaries before making them redundant; [15859]

(2) if he will instruct NHS trusts and health authorities that managers on fixed-term contracts should not be made redundant for the purpose of management savings unless this can be done at nil cost. [15908]

Mr. Malone: These are local matters. All national health service boards are required to establish a remuneration and terms of service committee to exercise proper control of executive board members' remuneration. Trust boards are accountable for the proper appointment, appraisal and remuneration of their senior executives and, as in all their functions, boards must have regard to the public service values of accountability, probity and openness enshrined in the codes of conduct and accountability issued to all NHS boards in April 1994.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure the cost of management staff reductions at NHS health authorities does not exceed the annual savings. [15872]

Mr. Malone: It is for individual health authorities to keep their costs within agreed limits and so deliver their contribution to the overall planned savings.

Patient Transfers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines his Department issues to health authorities regarding the transfer for treatment in another area of patients advised against treatment in one authority. [15893]

Mr. Horam: None. This is a clinical matter and it is for doctors to determine.

NHS Trust Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will stop payments of salary to NHS trust directors for a calendar month during which they fail to attend any scheduled meetings; [15869]

(2) what action he plans to take about NHS trust non-executive directors who claim the full salary while attending only a minority of meetings. [15860]

Mr. Malone: There are no plans to make any change to the circumstances in which remuneration is payable to non-executive directors of national health service trusts.

Mr. Salya Narcein Bansal

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute an independent inquiry into the death of Mr. Salya Narcein Bansal in Wythenshawe hospital. [15897]

Mr. Horam: South Manchester University Hospitals national health service trust has already investigated this case under the standard NHS complaints procedures.

Children Act 1989 (Contact Orders)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he collects centrally on the effects or operation of section 8 orders under the Children Act 1989. [15963]

Mr. Bowis: None.

Wansbeck NHS Trust

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will call for a report in to the cost to Wansbeck NHS trust of terminating the services of its chief executive. [15864]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for Cheviot and Wansbeck national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Baker, chairman of the trust, for details.

Child Labour (Britain)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent representations he has received on child labour in Britain; and if he will make a statement. [14699]

Mrs Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on illegal child employment in the United Kingdom. [14706]

Mr. Bowis: A variety of views have been expressed in response to our recent consultation on proposals for some changes to the law on children's employment.

DEFENCE

Asbestosis

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel (a) have been obliged to retire because of asbestos or allied conditions and (b) have developed asbestosis or allied conditions after leaving the services in the last 10 years. [16225]

Mr. Soames: Five service personnel—two Army, two Royal Navy and one RAF—have retired in the last 10 years because of asbestosis or allied conditions. Figures for those who have developed asbestosis or allied conditions after leaving the services are not available.

Commanding Officers (Territorial Army)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many commanding officers of regiment and battalion sized units in the Territorial Army are (a) territorials and (b) regulars; and if he will break down the figures by (i) regiment, (ii) corps and (iii) officer training corps, indicating the equivalent figures for 1990. [15746]

HMY Britannia

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures have been taken to reduce the annual operating cost of Her Majesty's yacht, Britannia; and if he will make a statement. [16263]

Mr. Soames: The demands on Britannia, and hence her operating costs, have varied from year to year, depending on the number and location of countries she has been required to visit. A number of measures have, however, been taken to reduce operating costs. Over the last two years these have included a reduction of 5 per cent. in the size of the ship's complement, and the regrading of the commanding officer's post from rear admiral to commodore.

Type 23 Frigates

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on the timing of the announcement of the contract for type 23 frigates; and if he will make a statement. [15779]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Representations have been received from various Members of Parliament as well as from representatives of the management and the work force of both tenderers. An announcement will be made as soon as the decision has been taken.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Refugees (Rwanda and Zaire)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the situation of Rwandan refugees in Zaire. [16169]

Mr. Hanley: We are in regular contact with the Zairean and Rwandan Governments and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees about the situation of the Rwandan refugees. The assessment of UN agencies is that levels of food and other basic requirements for the refugees remain sufficient for the time being. Agencies have also made provision for the large-scale voluntary return of the refugees to Rwanda, which is important for the long-term stability of the Great Lakes region.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made and what discussions he has held with (a) the Zairean Government and (b) the UNHCR about the situation in refugee camps on the border between Rwanda and Zaire. [16170]

Mr. Hanley: Our ambassador in Kinshasa has discussed the situation in the refugee camps with Zairean Ministers, reminding them of our opposition to the forcible repatriation of refugees. The ambassador visited the camps on 16 February, and discussed the situation with the local administration and UNHCR officials. Our mission to the UN in Geneva is also in regular contact with UNHCR headquarters staff about this.

Burundi

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the stocks of arms available to different factions in Burundi. [16172]

Mr. Hanley: We have made no such assessment.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions representatives of Her Majesty's Government have had with the Burundian Government. [16191]

Mr. Hanley: The British ambassador in Kigali visited Bujumbura from 24 to 26 January, when she met a number of Minister and political leaders. Baroness Chalker is due to meet the Burundi Minister in London on 22 February.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held (a) bilaterally and (b) through the European Union regarding the situation in Burundi with (i) the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth, (ii) the Secretary-General of the Organisation of African Unity and (iii) the Secretary-General of the United Nations. [16173]

Mr. Hanley: We have maintained close contact with the UN Secretary-General about the situation in Burundi and have played an active part in discussions in the UN Security Council. We have also supported EU efforts, including the appointment of an EU special representative for the Great Lakes region, and a further visit to Burundi by the EU troika on 12 February. Additionally, we have kept in touch with the Organisation of African Unity secretariat, bilaterally and through the EU troika. There have been no recent discussions with the Commonwealth Secretary-General about Burundi, although we are in close touch with a number of Commonwealth leaders in the region who have an important role to play.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of and what steps he has taken to monitor the situation in Burundi. [16171]

Mr. Hanley: We continue to monitor closely the fragile situation in Burundi. We are giving full support to the efforts of the UN, OAU, regional leaders and the EU to promote political progress.

Departmental Suppliers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ensure that the Overseas Development Administration identifies the size of its suppliers by the number of their employees. [15677]

Mr. Hanley: ODA and its procurement agents have instigated arrangements for asking suppliers bidding for work whether they have fewer than 200 employees.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Legislation (Complexity)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Lord President of the Council what steps he is taking to eliminate unnecessary complexity in primary and secondary legislation. [15765]

Mr. Newton: It is the Government's settled policy that neither primary nor secondary legislation should contain unnecessary provisions, and that provisions should be drafted as simply as is consistent with certainty.

Westminster Hall

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if the southern floor of Westminster Hall is sinking; and if he will make a statement. [15405]

Mr. Ray Powell: Over a period of years there has been some slight movement of the floor at the south end of Westminster Hall. A firm of structural engineers specialising in historic buildings has been appointed to investigate and is expected to produce an interim report in April 1996. Levels and other measurements are monitored regularly. Investigations already made over the Christmas period suggest that major work will not be required.

Security Turnstiles

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee on what date the security turnstiles were installed at the subway entrance to the House; on how many days since repair and maintenance staff have had to be called to them; and what was the estimated cost to parliamentary funds of that maintenance. [13205]

Mr. Ray Powell [holding answer 1 February 1996]: The security turnstiles were installed on 1 September 1993. It is not the practice to publish details of the costs of security measures which have been implemented. Maintenance staff were called out on 66 occasions between November 1993 and December 1995 and the cost of that was borne by the manufacturers of the turnstiles.

Mr. Jaques Arnold: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what has been spent on the provision and maintenance of the turnstiles at the pedestrian entrance by Westminster bridge. [13053]

Mr. Powell [holding answer 12 February 1996]: The security turnstiles were installed on 1 September 1993. It is not the practice to publish details of the costs of security measures which have been implemented. Maintenance staff were called out on 66 occasions between November 1993 and December 1995 and the cost of that was borne by the manufacturers of the turnstiles.

Palace of Westminster Terrace

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what plans there are to restore the Terrace of the Palace of Westminster to its original level. [13048]

Mr. Ray Powell [holding answer 12 February 1996]: It would be feasible to restore the Terrace to its original level. When the 10-year rolling programme is next reviewed, the Accommodation and Works Committee will be able to consider whether it would be good value for money to do so.

New Parliamentary Building

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee which company was awarded the roofing contract for the new parliamentary building; and what was the price at which it was awarded. [14673]

Mr. Ray Powell [holding answer 14 February 1996]: I am pleased to announce that, after competitive tendering, the contract for the manufacture and erection of the roof has been awarded to Watson Steel Ltd., Bolton, but regret that it is not the practice to divulge commercially sensitive financial information.

PRIME MINISTER

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister if he will support the setting up of an eminent persons group to seek to discuss a possible settlement to the conflict in Kashmir; and if he will make a settlement. [16035]

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any plans to set up an eminent persons group. We continue to believe that the best way forward on Kashmir should involve simultaneous progress on dialogue between India and Pakistan; improvement in human rights in Kashmir and a genuine political process there; and a clear cessation of support for violence in Kashmir.

Naturalisation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in 1993 Government Whips submitted written statements or were consulted on individual applications for naturalisation as a British citizen; and if he will make a statement. [15563]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1996]: In 1993, Home Office Ministers and officials in the immigration and nationality department received 10 letters from six hon. Members who were Government Whips about individual applications for naturalisation as a British citizen, all of which were constituency cases.

Correspondence from the hon. Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) cannot be located immediately. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will write to the hon. Member shortly.

No Government Whips were consulted about any individual cases for naturalisation.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Hall: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many civil servants have been assigned to work on the Government's response to the Scott report as of 13 February; [15704]

(2) if he will list the grades and job titles of all civil servants who have worked on the preparation of the Government's response to the Scott report. [15706]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1996]: The information is not held centrally and could therefore be assembled only at disproportionate cost. Access to the report itself prior to publication was, however, restricted to a small number of officials in the main Departments concerned.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of his written statement and replies to written questions posed by Sir Richard Scott to the inquiry into trade with Iraq. [15694]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1996]: I understand that Sir Richard Scott will be publishing these documents as soon as practicable.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now list the titles of each of the papers his office made available to the Scott inquiry. [15701]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1996]: I understand that Sir Richard Scott will be making available the source documents referred to in his report and responses to requests for written evidence as soon as possible.

Iraq (Equipment Exports)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the companies or individuals which made the representations referred to in his answer to the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) on 24 November 1992, Official Report, column 583. [15702]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1996]: No. The names of companies or individuals who have corresponded with my Department is confidential unless they give their permission for this information to be disclosed.

Chile (Armaments Production)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what communications (a) he and (b) other Ministers received from Dr. Carlos Cardoen of Chile since 1985 over the procurement of British machine tools for the production of armaments in Chile. [16000]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, we have no record of any such communications having been received from Dr. Carlos Cardoen.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Register of Conventional Arms Transfers

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of compiling the latest United Kingdom submission to the United Nations register of conventional arms transfers; to whom it was circulated; and what responses he has received in respect of the submission. [15961]

Mr. David Davis: We strongly support the UN register of conventional arms which was set up following a personal initiative of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister at the European Council in April 1991, and are committed to its success.

No study has ever been made into the cost of compiling the UK submission to the register.

The UK's return for each calender year is submitted to the United Nations by 30 April of the following year. Copies are also made available to partners in the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe and placed in the Libraries of the House. Members of the public can also request copies of the UK return from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office or the Ministry of Defence.

No responses have been received, although independent studies have been made by universities and organisations such as the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom security and intelligence services provided information to their United States counterparts in regard to Iraqi attempts to procure components towards the construction of nuclear weapons between 1987 and 1990. [15978]

Mr. David Davis: Intelligence reporting on Iraqi procurement intentions is covered in the report of Sir Richard Scott's inquiry. It is not our practice to comment on the intelligence relationship with a close ally.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now reconsider publication of the report received from the UN special commission on Iraq, listing the names of military and dual-use equipment suppliers to Iraq, given to UNSCOM by the Iraqi Government on 26 January 1993. [15972]

Mr. Davis: It is not our practice to comment on information passed to us by the UN special commission. We understand that no such list was passed by the Iraqi Government to the UN special commission on the date in question.

Uranium Sales

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 389, regarding the selling of weapons-grade enriched uranium by Russia to Euratom for use in European research reactors, what countries this material is going to; what special security arrangements are in place to avoid unauthorised diversions; what representations have been made about this sale by the United States authorities; and what was his response. [15980]

Mr. David Davis: Negotiations are still continuing between Euratom and Minatom over the possibility of acquiring highly enriched uranium—HEU—for use in European research reactors. It is for the countries concerned to comment on their own prospective involvement. The UK's role would be limited to possible processing of the HEU at Dounreay for use elsewhere in Europe. The material in question would be subject to Euratom and International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards and to stringent security arrangements in line with international requirements and recommendations. The UK has not received any representations on this subject from the US authorities.

Turkey

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultation took place with Her Majesty's Government over the revised EC document COM(95) 389 final "The Implementation of a Special Financial Co-operation Measure for Turkey"; what agreement was reached regarding provisions for human rights and democracy in Turkey as part of the EU aid package for that Government; what reasons were given for not extending the consultation upon the revised document to the United Kingdom Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [16001]

Mr. David Davis: We welcome this financial co-operation measure, which supports the customs union with Turkey which came into force at the beginning of this year.

The draft measure was subject to the usual procedures for parliamentary scrutiny in the UK. The UK has been fully involved in subsequent discussion of this measure in the Council and working groups. We do not believe that the final text, which we hope will be adopted in the Foreign Affairs Council on 26 February, was sufficiently different from the original draft to require further parliamentary scrutiny.

The measure makes provision for the Council to take appropriate action if democratic principles, the rule of law and basic human rights are violated.

East Timor

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make urgent representations to his French counterpart to retain discussion of the situation in East Timor on the agenda of the EU-Association of South-East Asian Nations meeting on south-east Asian affairs to be held in Bangkok. [15957]

Mr. David Davis: We remain in close touch with France, and our other EU partners, on the topics for discussion at the Asia-Europe meeting in Bangkok.

South Africa

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 13 February, Official Report, column 490, if contact has been made between his Department and other authorities in South Africa (a) before and (b) since Mr. Grecian's departure for South Africa. [16152]

Mr. David Davis: Officials have frequent contacts with the South African authorities in the course of their duties. However, they had no contacts concerning Mr. Grecian prior to his arrival and arrest in South Africa. Since his arrest, officials have been in touch with the South African prison authorities and the Ministry for Foreign Affairs in the course of their consular duties.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16014]

Mr. David Davis: The information is in the table.

Subject to:

	Investigation by Parliamentary Commissioner	Scrutiny by Audit Commission	Scrutiny by HAO	Statutory provisions for open government	Performance indicators	Provisions under citizens charter
British Council	Yes	No	Yes	No	Yes	Yes

Westminster Foundation for Democracy	No	No	Yes	No	No	No
Commonwealth Scholarship Commission	No	No	Yes	No	No	No
Crown Agent's Holding and Realisation Board	No	No	Yes	No	No	No

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base and which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16032]

Mr. Davis: The information is in the following table:

Name of body	Statutory base	Admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings	Hold open meetings for the public
Britain–Russia Centre	Yes	No	No
British Association for Central and Eastern Europe	Yes	No	No

Sex Tourism

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Commonwealth countries who suffer from the abuse of young children in their countries by sex tourists as to what help or advice his Department can give to such countries. [16045]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We regularly raise our concerns with Commonwealth and other countries where child prostitution is prevalent. We are always willing to co-operate with such countries in their efforts to eradicate the abhorrent practice of child sex tourism.

Algeria

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards and what steps he is taking to promote trade between Algeria and the United Kingdom. [16158]

Mr. David Davis: Algeria is not one of the United Kingdom's top 80 export markets—UK exports were £64 million in 1995. Therefore, it has not been the subject of a sustained promotional campaign.

The current security situation in Algeria has meant that our efforts have been modest. It is not realistic to encourage new exporters into a market which they cannot visit safely and whose potential is not easy to access. However, we are aware of the long-term promise of this market and follow developments there closely.

Mr. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much economic aid has been provided by the United Kingdom to Algeria in each of the last five years for which information is available. [16159]

Mr. Davis: Over the last five years, the UK has provided the following bilateral aid:

1992–93: £377,000

1993–94: £192,000

1994–95: £140,000

In addition, the latest figures for the estimated UK share of total multilateral disbursements of official development assistance are:

1989: £2.5 million

1990: £1.3 million

1991: £1.8 million

1992: £1.2 million

1993: £5.7 million

Mr. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since the general election of 1979 Ministers have (a) visited Algeria and (b) met (i) the Foreign Minister of Algeria and (ii) one of his deputies. [16160]

Mr. Davis: Although there was a visit to Algeria by the Minister for Industry and Energy, my right hon. Friend the member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar), a meeting with the Foreign Minister or one of his deputies was not part of the programme.

There have been no visits to Algeria by Government Ministers since 1993.

To ascertain whether there have been visits in the period 1979 to 1992 would require considerable research which would incur disproportionate cost.

Mr. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he discussed democratic progress when he last met the Foreign Minister of Algeria. [16162]

Mr. Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed democratic progress with the Algerian Foreign Minister when they met in October 1995.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent on external legal advice for Ministers and civil servants in relation to the Scott inquiry and report since the period covered by his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 589. [15925]

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 19 February 1996]: £89,417.96 has been spent on external legal advice for Ministers and civil servants since the answer given by the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), on 17 January, column 589. The total figure for this Department now stands at £407,583.42.

WALES

Health Service (Management Costs)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the management costs for the Rhymney Valley health unit for each of the years from 1990 to 1995 expressed as an actual figure and as a percentage of total budget. [15529]

Mr. Richards: The cost for 1994–95 was £0.775 million, or 4.13 per cent. The information is not available centrally for earlier years.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the management costs for the Pembrokeshire NHS trust for the years (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95 expressed as an actual figure and as a percentage of total budget. [15527]

Mr. Richards: Pembrokeshire NHS trust became operational from 1 April 1992. Management cost information is not available centrally for 1992–93. The cost for 1993–94 and 1994–95 was £2.053 million, or 4.95 per cent., and £1.873 million, or 4.46 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the management costs for the Llanelli/Dinefwr NHS trust for the years (a) 1992—93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95 expressed as an actual figure and as a percentage of total budget. [15526]

Mr. Richards: Llanelli/Dinefwr NHS trust became operational on 1 April 1993. The management cost for 1993–94 and 1994–95 was £1.024 million or 3.38 per cent., and £0.812 million, or 2.62 per cent., respectively.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the management costs for the Merthyr and Cynon Valley health unit for the years (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92, (c) 1992–93, (d) 1993–94 and (e) 1994–95 expressed as an actual figure and as a percentage of total budget. [15530]

Mr. Richards: The cost for 1994–95 was £1.478 million, or 2.62 per cent. The information is not available centrally for earlier years.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the management costs for the Heusol health unit for the years (a) 1990–91, (b) 1991–92, (c) 1992–93, (d) 1993–94 and (e) 1994–95 expressed as an actual figure and as a percentage of total budget. [15528]

Mr. Richards: The cost for 1994–95 was £0.489 million or 3.51 per cent. The information is not available centrally for earlier years.

Housing Starts

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of housing starts (a) by local authorities, (b) by housing associations and (c) in the private sector in each year from 1970. [15532]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The requested information has been published in table 5 of Welsh housing statistics No. 7 1987—pre-1975—and table 2.1 of Welsh housing statistics No. 15 1995, post-1975; copies of both are in the Library of the House.

Business Link, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects there will be a business link one-stop shop in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement. [15763]

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend launched the new business connect service on 15 January. Businesses throughout Wales, including in Clwyd, can access the service through a single telephone number: 0345 96 97 98.

Health Authority General Managers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total pay bill for NHS health authorities' general managers for 1994–95. [16188]

Mr. Richards: The total pay bill for NHS health authorities chief executives or general managers for 1994–95 amounted to £935,000.

Welsh Language

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the projected funding by the Arts Council of Wales to support (a) Welsh language publications and (b) English language publications in the Principality in 1996–97; [16161]

(2) if he will list, by individual publication, the average circulation figures for those Welsh language publications which received financial assistance from the Arts Council of Wales in each year since 1991; [16163]

(3) if he will list, by individual publication, the average circulation figures for those English language publications which received financial assistance from the Arts Council of Wales in each year since 1991; [16164]

(4) what was the total amount of Arts Council of Wales funding to English language publications in the Principality in each year since 1989; [16165]

(5) what was the total amount of Arts Council of Wales funding to Welsh language publications in the Principality in each year since 1989. [16166]

Mr. Richards: This is an operational matter for the Arts Council of Wales and I will ask the chief executive to write to the hon. Member with the information. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent of 19 January 1994, Official Report, column 749, in regard to changes made in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989. [15624]

Mr. Larg: The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 was amended seven times between its entry into force on 14 February 1990 and 31 December 1991, when it was replaced by the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991, amended three times. Since then, two further Export of Goods (Control) Orders have been made—one in 1992, amended seven times, and its replacement in 1994, amended five times to date.

Following the implementation of Council regulation (EC) No. 3381/94 on the export of dual-use goods on 1 July 1995, the 1994 order was partially revoked in respect of dual-use goods and the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1995 introduced.

It would not be possible other than at disproportionate cost to describe all the changes made by these orders, regulations and associated amendments. Changes introduced since 1989 have included relaxations of controls agreed by COCOM before its demise, the implementation of agreements reached in the three non-proliferation regimes referred to in the previous answer, the introduction of an end-use control and the implementation of a new EC regulation on the export of dual-use goods.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the estimated cost during 1997 of industrial tribunal proceedings under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [16080]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The average cost to public expenditure of an industrial tribunal application in 1994–95 was £377. Current estimates are that there will be some 3,000 claims per annum made under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. On this basis, the cost during 1997 will be around £1,131,000.

Energy Council

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names and status of those who attended an informal EU Energy Council held in February 1996; what references were made to the energy White Paper on the basis for the future framework of EU energy policy; who will represent Her Majesty's Government at the Energy Council set for 7 May; and if he will make a statement. [15778]

Mr. Eggar: I represented the United Kingdom at the informal Council in Bologna which was chaired by Professor Clo, the Italian Minister for Industry and Foreign Trade. Other member states were mostly represented at ministerial level and Commissioner Papoutsis also attended.

Other diary commitments permitting, I also intend to represent the United Kingdom at the formal Council in May. As regards the discussion on the Commission's energy policy White Paper, I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms Quin) on 19 February 1996, Official Report, columns 46–47.

National Homecare Servicing and Warranties Company

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the Director General of Fair Trading to report on the activities of the National Homecare Servicing and Warranties Company. [15423]

Mr. John M. Taylor: This is a matter for the Director General of Fair Trading.

Insolvency Convention

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to consult interested parties in the United Kingdom on the EC convention on insolvency proceedings. [16896]

Mr. Oppenheim: The EC convention on involvency proceedings aims to simplify the administration of insolvency cases which have cross-border aspects by providing a framework within which the different insolvency regimes of member states can interact with more predictable consequences and more efficiently and effectively than is currently the case. It would apply only in European Union member states and then only if a debtor's centre of main interests was situated in one of those states. It is not a harmonisation measure.

The Government wish to ascertain the views of insolvency practitioners and other interested parties on the likely practical consequences if the convention were implemented in the United Kingdom. Therefore, I have today issued a consultative document on the convention and copies of the document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The closing date for the submission of comments is 12 April 1996.

The convention was opened for signature on 23 November 1995 and 12 member states have already signed. It will remain open for signature until 23 May 1996.

Digital Audio Broadcasting

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further plans he has to promote digital audio broadcasting. [16895]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The provisions in the Broadcasting Bill are designed to give terrestrial digital audio broadcasting its best chance of success. The Government are committed to play their full part by creating the most favourable environment for the rapid introduction of new digital broadcasting technologies and, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Romford (Sir M. Neubert) on 19 January 1994, at column 647, the Government announced that certain frequencies would be made available to allow the introduction of DAB services. However, the Government were unable at the time to give any commitment that DAB services would remain in this band once it became possible to free up spectrum in the FM band by closing down analogue services. I am pleased to announce that the frequencies 217.5 to 230 MHz will now be the long-term home for DAB. This removes a major uncertainty for the industry and will give broadcasters, multiplex operators and transmission providers the confidence to invest in new transmission networks and equipment in the knowledge that a move back to the FM band involving further costs will not be required.

Together with the other measures we are taking, this will give further encouragement to the development of DAB which offers the prospect of high-quality reception, even in cars, more services, as well as novel data transmissions involving text, or even pictures, that will enhance the listening experience.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in the Official Report the titles of each of the papers his Department provided to the Scott inquiry. [15697]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 February 1996]: I have no plans to list the titles of the 28,290 pages of papers which my Department provided to the Scott inquiry. The inquiry will be publishing a substantial number of these documents in the annexe to the report.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been spent on external legal advice for Ministers and civil servants in relation to the Scott inquiry and report since 18 January. [15928]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The amount paid since 18 January 1996 by my Department to external legal advisers for advice given to Ministers and civil servants in relation to the Scott inquiry and report is £64,066.

Iraq (Military Equipment)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the export of Cymbeline radar systems to Iraq prior to August 1990 complied with (a) stated export guidelines and (b) existing UN embargoes. [14903]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 February 1996]: Under the usual interdepartmental consultation procedures, applications for the export of Cymbeline mortar-detecting radar to Iraq were deemed to supply an insignificant enhancement of military capability. The supply of this equipment therefore complied with the stated guidelines and, accordingly, the applications were approved.

There was no UN embargo affecting Iraq prior to August 1990.

Mr. Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for the periods (a) 1985 to 1988 and (b) 1989 to August 1990 the number of occasions his Department refused an export licence for military or defence equipment orders to Iraq. [14899]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 16 February 1996]: Volume V of Lord Justice Scott's report of his inquiry into the export of defence equipment and dual-use goods to Iraq and related prosecutions contains a schedule of export licence applications from 1984 to 1990, submitted by my Department. This schedule contains details of what goods export licences were applied for, who the goods were destined for, the value of the order and whether the licence was granted or refused.

World Trade (UK Share)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1995, Official Report, column 1266, what was the United Kingdom's percentage share of world trade in manufactured goods for (a) the second half of 1974, (b) the second half of 1979 and (c) what was the latest available figure. [11058]

Mr. Lang: According to estimates derived from OECD data, the UK share of world exports of manufactures was 7.2 per cent. in the second half of 1974, 7 per cent. in the second half of 1979 and 5.5 per cent. in the second half of 1994—the latest available period.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmental Assessment Regulations (Uncultivated Land)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the Ministry will issue a consultation paper on the environmental assessment regulations for the use of uncultivated land. [15848]

Mr. Boswell: Consultations will be undertaken in due course.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the reason for the delay in issuing the consultation paper on the environmental assessment regulations for the use of uncultivated land. [15849]

Mr. Boswell: We need to ensure that the measures which we propose balance carefully the need to provide for environmental assessment in the small number of cases where this may be required by the EC directive with the minimum regulatory and administrative burden. Consultations will be undertaken when proposals have been developed further.

Night Shooting Licences

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food who is responsible for authorising and signing night shooting licences; what applications and for what areas have been (a) made and (b) granted since 1994; and if he will place a copy of the terms and conditions of the licences in the Library. [16157]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 20 February 1996]: Section 98 of the Agriculture Act 1947 provides the authority for the Minister to issue notices requiring night shooting for the purposes of preventing damage to crops, pasture, animal or human foodstuffs, livestock, trees, hedges, banks or any works on land. Any such notices are authorised by and signed on behalf of the Minister.

Since 1994, two applications for notices to shoot at night have been received. Both were for areas within the county of Somerset and both were issued. As requested, a copy of the terms and conditions of the notices has been placed in the Library of the House.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each regulatory body for which he is responsible indicating for each the percentage of business people on the board. [15735]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The information requested is as follows:

Body	Percentage of business people on board
Agricultural Wages Board	38
UK Register of Organic Food Standards	55
Wine Standards Board	67

In addition, I am responsible for 101 appointments to 11 sea fisheries committees, 92 per cent. of whom are business people.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Royal Family (Private Law Rights)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General (1) on what basis he concluded that the proposed publication of the memoir of a former employee of the royal household at Buckingham palace constituted a deliberate attempt to interfere with the administration of justice; and if he will make a statement; [15853]

(2) in what circumstances he is able to act on behalf of members of the public in order to restrain newspapers from publishing reports or articles written by or relating to their former employees; [15857]

(3) for what reasons he sought from the editor of The People an undertaking that the paper would not publish the memoir of a former employee of the Buckingham palace household; [15851]

(4) what special responsibilities he has in relation to representing (a) Her Majesty the Queen and (b) other members of the royal family in matters relating to their private lives. [15852]

The Attorney-General: As Her Majesty's Attorney-General, I bring proceedings on behalf of Her Majesty in her private capacity to enforce her private law rights. This includes proceedings against employees or former employees of her household in respect of breach of confidence or breach of contract. I do not have the same function in respect of other members of the royal family or members of the public.

It is a contempt of court for a person who is not a party to proceedings to take steps which are intended to interfere with or impede the administration of justice by subverting the purpose of the proceedings. The contempt is criminal in nature. I can take proceedings for criminal contempt against that person. I take them not on behalf of the Government or the parties to the original proceedings but in my capacity as guardian of the public interest.

On 8 February it became apparent that The People intended to publish a story concerning a former employee of the royal household who was the subject of an injunction obtained from the High Court in 1983.

The next day, a letter was sent to the newspaper and its publisher enclosing a copy of the injunction and seeking an undertaking not to publish material of the kind referred to in it. Such publication would have been a criminal contempt of court.

Having considered the response of the editor I concluded that, on the information that she had provided as to the scope of the proposed story, it was not clear that it contravened the terms of the injunction, and it would not be in the public interest to take criminal contempt proceedings against the editor or the publisher. The newspaper was so informed on 15 February.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions he has taken action to restrain (a) newspaper publishers and (b) other publishers from publishing details of the private lives of (i) members of the royal family and (ii) other individuals in the last three years. [15856]

The Attorney-General: There is no record of any proceedings brought by me in the last three years for these purposes.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Probation Work

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his assessment of the needs and circumstances in Northern Ireland that prevent his instructing the probation board from bringing policy into line with England and Wales by ending its rule of recruiting only those with a social work qualification for probation work. [12822]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to my reply of 11 January to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) Official Report, columns 298–99. Any change to the current Northern Ireland arrangements will be made in the light of experience in England and Wales, and after full consultation with all interested parties in Northern Ireland.

Meningitis

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have contracted meningitis in the past 10 years; how many people in Northern Ireland have died of meningitis in the past 10 years; what programme the Government have in place to inform residents of Northern Ireland about the programmes on meningitis and its prevention; what is the financial cost of the programme in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [15180]

Mr. Moss: The information on notifications of and deaths from meningitis is given in the table. Vaccination of pre-school children against Hib meningitis was introduced in Northern Ireland from October 1992 with a campaign to inform professionals and the public. The campaign cost £50,000 and the cost of the vaccination programme is in excess of £600,000 per annum. A further public awareness campaign about meningitis was mounted in February 1994 at a cost of £1,000.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how his nursery voucher scheme will address the needs of the most deprived children in the most deprived areas; [15455]

(2) what powers (a) the education and library boards and (b) the private sector will have to top up the value of nursery vouchers; [15453]

(3) if he will make a statement about progress made on the introduction of the nursery voucher scheme in Northern Ireland and the time scale of the next steps to be taken; [15457]

(4) what estimates he has made of the costs of introducing a nursery voucher scheme in Northern Ireland; [15452]

(5) what discussions he has had with private providers of pre-school care about the nursery voucher scheme; and what was the outcome of those discussions; [15456]

(6) what is (a) the cost of providing a full-time nursery education place in each of the education and library boards in Northern Ireland and (b) the intended value of a voucher; and what proposals he has to meet the difference between (a) and (b). [15454]

Mr. Ancram: Nursery vouchers will be introduced in Northern Ireland in 1997. The scheme will operate on similar lines to that in other UK regions, with all children being eligible for a voucher in the term after their fourth birthday. Details of the proposed arrangements in Northern Ireland will be made available for comment as soon as possible. New legislation will be required and this will be the subject of consultation later this year. The Government have provided an additional £8 million to meet the costs of the scheme in Northern Ireland, based on a voucher value of £1,100 for a full year.

School Travel

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the relative costs of school travel in Northern Ireland and other parts of the United Kingdom. [15459]

Mr. Ancram: Comparative expenditure figures on school transport in Northern Ireland and other parts of the United Kingdom over the period 1989–90 to 1993–94 are provided in the table:

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
England	229,046	259,385	283,382	293,108	288,411

Free School Transport

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the costs of free school transport in real and constant price terms in each year since 1979. [15461]

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Net expenditure £	Constant prices £
1979–80	7,842,838	19,238,236
1980–81	10,437,504	21,638,179

[1] Estimate.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils have benefited from free school transport in each year since 1979; and if the pupils were in primary or secondary education. [15462]

Mr. Ancram: The information is set out in the table. Details by school sector are available only from 1984–85:

	Primary	Post primary	Special	Total
1979–80	—	—	—	83,556
1980–81	—	—	—	87,560

1995–96	25,931	84,225	5,799	115,955

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what limits there are on the financial assistance that is given to parents for free school transport for their children. [15460]

Mr. Ancram: Free home-to-home transport is currently provided where a pupil gains admission to a school outside statutory walking distance from home—defined as two miles for pupils under 11 and three miles for other pupils, measured by the nearest available route—and provided that a public or board transport service to or in the vicinity of the school is already available.

Child Care

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contributions he is seeking from the European Union for the extension of pre-five child care in Northern Ireland. [15458]

Mr. Moss: The Government are not currently seeking funding from the European Union for the extension of pre-five child care in Northern Ireland. There is, however, scope under several of the European structural funds programmes already approved for Northern Ireland to support the extension of pre-five child care, most notably measure 2 of sub-programme 4 of the European Union special support programme for peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland. This measure aims to prevent the future social and labour market exclusion of children and young people by funding, for example, pre-school child care and education projects. The total European fund available under this measure is about £7 million over the period 1996 to 1999.

Rate Collection Agency

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what work has been contracted out to (a) public and (b) private sector employers by the Rate Collection Agency offices; what assessment he has made of the cost of contracting out; and if he will make a statement. [15710]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Rate Collection Agency under its chief executive, Mr. D. W. Gallagher. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. W. Gallagher to Mr. Eddie McGrady, dated 16 February 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about contracting out of work by the Rate Collection Agency.

The Agency contracts out all printing work, together with the handling procedures required to issue communications to ratepayers. There are 2 elements to this: the annual billing exercise and the daily round of revised rate accounts, refunds, Housing Benefit information, instalment reminders, etc.

The annual billing exercise involves the issue of around 450,000 accounts at 1 April each year. It would be neither cost effective nor practicable for the RCA to be resourced in terms of staff and equipment to handle work volumes of this magnitude on a once a year basis. The task must of necessity be contracted out. After an open competition conducted under EC regulations, open to both public and private sectors, a 3 year contract has recently been awarded to a private sector firm. Costs are commercial in confidence, but I can assure you that value for money was an important factor in deciding the successful bidder.

Handling the daily round of output from the RCA requires sophisticated printing, collating, and enveloping machinery. Although the RCA could do this work internally, at roughly the same cost as the private sector, transfer of the risk associated with back up for the machinery, staffing, etc, swung the balance in favour of contracting out. This contract was also awarded through competition where value for money was a key factor. Again, costs are commercial in confidence. To date the contractors have proved more than satisfactory in service delivery.

Like many businesses, the Agency has to deal with peaks and troughs of work. Recently, it was decided to seek outside help in opening 7,600 replies from ratepayers received as a result of a special exercise. As this proved cost-effective and allowed staff to concentrate on other duties the Agency will continue to examine how this sort of approach might be used to manage future workload peaks.

The Rate Collection Agency is conscious that the cost of collecting the rates is ultimately borne by the ratepayers of Northern Ireland and will continue to seek the most cost effective means of carrying out its functions while at the same time providing a good quality service to its ratepayer customers.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of expenditure on all forms of hospitality and entertainment by (a) his Department, (b) his Department's agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies, for (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1989–90, (iii) 1991–92, (iv) 1993–94, (v) 1994–95, (vi) 1995–96 and (vii) 1996–97. [11423]

Housing Rents

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average rent for (a) privately rented, (b) council and (c) housing association housing in Belfast. [15578]

Mr. Moss: The present average rent paid by Northern Ireland Housing Executive tenants in Belfast is £30.64 per week. Statistics on rental levels in the private housing sector are not collected. Statistics on rental levels in the housing associations are collected by each individual association but are not available by location.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Demonstration Sites

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she list the sites managed by her Department which she has permitted to be used for demonstrations and events for each of the last five years, together with the dates and the organisations involved. [14655]

Tourism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the United Kingdom's share of the world tourism market in each year since 1979. [15369]

Mr. Sproat: Complete figures for each year are not available, but the latest world tourism organisation yearbook shows that the UK share of the world total for international tourism receipts was 4.4 per cent. in 1993 and 6.7 per cent. in 1980. Provisional figures published by the British Tourist Authority show a 1994 UK share of 4.5 per cent. All these calculations are based on amounts converted into US dollars.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate she has made of the number of people employed in the tourism industry; and how many of these workers are (a) full time, (b) part time and (c) women. [15368]

Mr. Sproat: There were 1,545,000 employees in employment in tourism-related industries in Great Britain in September 1995, and a further 186,000 self-employed. The latest available estimate is therefore total employment of 1,731,000.

Of the employees in employment (a) 705,000 are full time, (b) 841,000 are part time and (c) 911,000 are women.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the United Kingdom's tourism balance of trade for each year since 1979. [15370]

Mr. Sproat: Figures for the travel account in the UK balance of payments, published by the Central Statistical Office, are as follows:

UK Balance of Payments: Travel Account

£ million current prices

	Credits (earnings from overseas visitors to UK)	Debits (expenditure by UK residents going abroad)	Balance
1979	2,797	2,109	688
1980	2,961	2,738	223
1981	2,970	3,272	–302
1982	3,188	3,640	–452
1983	4,003	4,090	–87
1984	4,614	4,663	–49
1985	5,442	4,871	571
1986	5,553	6,083	–530
1987	6,260	7,280	–1,020
1988	6,184	8,216	–2,032
1989	6,945	9,357	–2,412
1990	7,785	9,916	–2,131
1991	7,168	9,834	–2,666
1992	8,076	11,283	–3,207
1993	9,375	12,707	–3,332
1994	9,920	14,500	–4,580
1995[1]	8,480	11,507	–3,027

[1] Q1-Q3 only; seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the most recent estimate she has made of the value of tourism to the United Kingdom's economy. [15371]

Mr. Sproat: Tourism makes a significant contribution to our economy. Spending by tourists in the UK was more than £36 billion in 1994, which is equivalent to more than 5 per cent. of total GDP. The number of jobs in tourism-related industries increased by nearly 4 per cent. in the year to last September, to reach nearly 1.75 million. The total economic and employment impact of travel and tourism is even greater than these figures show because of the indirect benefits of tourism spending across the economy.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16011]

Mr. Sproat: The information is as follows:

(a) Bodies subject to the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are listed in schedule 2 of the Parliamentary Commissioner Act 1967, as amended. This includes:

Arts Council of England

British Film Institute

British Library Board

Crafts Council

English Tourist Board

English Heritage

Museums and Galleries Commission

Trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund

Register of the Public Lending Right

Sports Council.

(b) None.

(c) All of my Department's executive NDPBs are subject to scrutiny by the Comptroller and Auditor General with the exception of the National Film Development Fund.

(d) None. But all bodies falling within the jurisdiction of the PCA are subject to the Code of Practice on Open Government. Lord Nolan's report on Standards in Public Life recommended that all executive NDPBs should develop their own codes of openness.

(e) My Department monitors the performance of its NDPBs as part of the Corporate Planning process, through which targets and performance indicators are set.

(f) The principles of the Citizen's Charter apply to all the Department's NDPBs.

Public Service Broadcasters

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) on what basis she has not offered to all public service television broadcasters guaranteed capacity in the digital environment sufficient to enable them to provide new services; what steps she plans to take to ensure parity of treatment for such public service broadcasters; and if she will make a statement; [16167]

(2) if she will make a statement on her policy on the role that additional and teletext services can play in stimulating consumer demand for digital broadcast services; and what steps she plans to take to ensure that adequate capacity is available to existing public service broadcasters to fulfil this role. [16168]

Mr. Sproat: The Government judge that a quarter of a multiplex should be more than sufficient for a television broadcaster to reproduce an existing programme service to an acceptable level of picture quality in digital form. This minimum capacity will be offered to S4C and Channel 4 in Wales, so that both might have the widest possible coverage there. The BBC will be offered a whole multiplex, on which it would be required to broadcast its existing two channels. Channel 3, Channel 5 and, outside Wales, Channel 4 will be offered half a multiplex each; again, they would be required to broadcast their existing services on that capacity.

Digital broadcasting also offers new opportunities for data and other additional services, including "super teletext" services, business information services and home shopping. The Government recognise that these services will be attractive to consumers and the Broadcasting Bill provides that such services may occupy up to 10 per cent. of the capacity of any multiplex.

Teletext, holder of the public service teletext licence, has been offered capacity on the multiplex to be shared between Channel 3, Channel 4 and S4C. The Secretary of State recently met Teletext to discuss its digital service and is considering further its request for increased guaranteed capacity so that it, like the broadcasters mentioned, would have sufficient guaranteed capacity also to provide new services. No decision has yet been made on that request.

Yvonne Arnaud Theatre, Guildford

Mr David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what correspondence she has received concerning the future of the Yvonne Arnaud theatre in Guildford. [14826]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 14 February 1996]: In addition to my right hon. Friend's own letters on the subject, correspondence has been received from my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor), the chairman and members of the theatre's appeals committee and the theatre's director and a number of members of the public. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has also received a large number of letters in a constituency capacity.

Royal Fine Art Commission

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she will place a copy of Sir Geoffrey Chipperfield's report on the Royal Fine Art Commission in the Library. [15731]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 19 February 1996]: We are finalising with DOE some detailed points relating to planning guidance. We will place the report and our conclusions in the Library as soon as consultations within government have been completed.

Windsor Castle

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much has been spent to date from public funds for the restoration of Windsor castle; and what is the expected timetable for completion of the restoration. [15926]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 19 February 1996]: By 31 March 1995 £5.7 million had been spent on the restoration from public funds; this is expected to increase to approximately £7.2 million by 31 March 1996.

The restoration is expected to be complete by the spring of 1998.

Gibraltarian Flag

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage in what circumstances the Gibraltarian flag may be flown at the Gibraltar Government office in London; and if he will make a statement. [15914]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 19 February 1996]: The Government guidelines issued by my Department cover only the flying of the Union flag on central Government buildings in the UK.

Departmental Suppliers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to ensure that her Department identifies the size of its suppliers by the number of their employees. [15611]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 20 February 1996]: In view of the relatively small expenditure on goods and services by my Department and its two agencies, we have no plans to identify the size of suppliers by the number of their employees.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list each regulatory body for which she is responsible indicating for each the percentage of business people on the board. [15732]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The information is provided below. The figures exclude the Office of the National Lottery which is responsible for regulating the national lottery but does not have board members.

English Heritage: 33 per cent.

Football Licensing Authority: 25 per cent.

Independent Television Commission: 40 per cent.

Radio Authority: 42 per cent.

S4C: 42 per cent.

SCOTLAND

GP Fundholding

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the findings of the study of general practitioner fundholding commissioned by his Department and carried out by John Howie of the department of general practice at Edinburgh university during 1995. [13250]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The findings of the project were reported as follows:

"SUMMARY OF CONCLUSIONS"

In relation to prescribing

1. Both holding a fund and being subject to the constraints of an indicative prescribing budget are associated with a reduced volume of prescribing;
2. fund-holders may be more cautious than non fund-holders in introducing new and more expensive preparations to their repertoire. (This is not itself necessarily a 'quality' issue);
3. the quality of prescribing has been maintained in that prescribing volume has risen in three clinical areas where this has been generally recommended by consensus thinking; and
4. budgets should be set on a per capita rather than on an historical basis, and that research aiming to identify what that per capita basis should be needs to be based on more sensitive measures of volume (for example,'DDD's') and not simply on formulae derived from 'prescribed-items.'

In relation to referral

5. Fund-holding has been associated with a significant change in the pattern of use of hospital services; the downward trend in most areas of activity has been matched by an upward trend in the use of direct access services;
6. the changes in waiting time and outcome have not been dramatic but are generally favourable; and
7. development of the process of setting capitation-based allocations will be difficult.

In relation to clinical care

8. The clinical care of patients at consultations has remained generally stable; however,
9. patients in some groups have done well in relation to others when consultation length and enablement are considered together. These include patients with angina, diabetes, chronic bronchitis and difficulties with seeing. They have in common that they are low prevalence problems, are associated with lower levels of social problems, affect older patients and (in the case of diabetes, angina and chronic bronchitis) belong to categories whose care has been subject to 'new contact' incentives.'
10. Patients in the other eight clinical groups (we studied) have done less well in relation to the above in that they report falling enablement and generally higher levels of increase in social morbidity. In the three most prevalent categories (pain, skin disorders, digestive problems) the falls in satisfaction have reached statistical significance;
11. patients with social problems which they wish to discuss have done well (receiving generally longer consultations and reporting sustained and average levels of satisfaction); and
12. patients with social problems they do not state they wish to discuss and who have high GHQ scores receive only average length consultations and report low enablement while those with low GHQ scores receive below average length consultations but report average enablement. Both these groups could be regarded as having done less well than others. Each is more prevalent than all but four of the clinical categories we studied.

In relation to administration

13. The process of negotiating the nature of specialist care between practitioners and specialists has been novel, has shifted ownership of care significantly and appropriately from secondary to primary care, and has been conceptually beneficial to general practitioners and patients; and
14. that further thought needs to be given to the evolution of fund-setting both for the prescribing and hospital services components of funds.

About perceptions of cost and benefit

15. Patients are generally very satisfied with the quality of the services they receive from general practitioners and the level of satisfaction has been maintained over the period in the fund-holding practices we studied and;
16. being the 'lead' doctors in a fund-holding practice has time and perhaps other costs which are higher than those experienced by other doctors. Their perceptions of benefits are also higher. Fund managers perceive higher costs than benefits. Non-lead doctors perceive both costs and benefits at a lower level than do the other groups.

Amongst respondents from fund-holding practices in March 1994

17. Sixty two per cent. are positive or very positive about fund-holding, 24 per cent. are neutral and 15 per cent. are negative; and more generally;
18. the concept of centrally funded evaluative work by independent researchers has been a strength of the 'shadow' experiment; it has worked acceptably (probably on both sides), and it could be a repeatable model in the future.

We finally conclude

19. That discussion of the possible benefits which might follow if the investments in management and in information technology given to fund-holders were also given to non fund-holders should be encouraged".

Lingerbay Inquiry

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost to Scottish Natural Heritage of the Lingerbay inquiry. [14611]

Mr. Kynoch: Scottish Natural Heritage estimates that it has spent £530,985 on the inquiry to date. This excludes an estimate of staff time, which could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of his Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14022]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My Department's record of making publicly available internal guidance documents and administrative manuals is extremely good. The following examples give a good indication of the wide range of information that is available or will be made available:

The Scottish Office Staff Handbook.

Staff guidance: Implementation of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

The Coast Protection Act 1949: A summary guide to legislative powers, definitions and Grant Assistance.

The Crofting Counties Agricultural Grants (Scotland) Scheme Handbook (available from Spring 1996).

Grants paid under section 10(1) of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. Desk instructions/procedure manual.

NHS Employers Code of Procedure on the NHS Superannuation Scheme (Scotland).

Confidentiality of Personal Health Information: Code of Practice.

Access to Health Records Act 1990—A guide for the NHS.

Teachers Employers Code of Practice on the Teachers Superannuation Scheme (Scotland).

Departmental Instructions relating to changes in fisheries licensing arrangements and quota management.

The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency: Code of Enforcement Practice.

The Scottish Prison Service Operating Standards.

Historic Scotland: Nature Conservation and Management Manual.

Historic Scotland: Policy on the Preservation of Monuments in State Care.

The following are examples of material which is not available for public inspection:

The Scottish Office Security Handbook.

Scottish Prison Service Security Manual.

Departmental Instruments relating to fisheries enforcement matters.

Village Shops

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the total amount of rates currently payable by village shops in Scotland.[15073]

Mr. Kynoch: This information is not held centrally.

Set-aside Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments were made in Scotland in 1994–95 for set-aside of between (a) £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and 25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000 and (h) over £75,000. [15336]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Set-aside payments which have been made to farmers in Scotland under the 1994 arable area payments scheme are as follows:

	Number
(a) £0–£5,000	3,090
(b) £5,001–£10,000	1,036
(c) £10,001–£15,000	275
(d) £15,001–£20,000	106
(e) £20,001–£25,000	41
(f) £25,001 and over	[1]42

[1] It is not possible to identify separately the number of payments above £50,000 for reasons of confidentiality.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments were made in Scotland in 1994–95 under the arable area payments scheme between (a) £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000 (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000 and (j) £150,001 and over. [15321]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Payments which have been made to farmers in Scotland under the 1994 arable area payments scheme are as follows:

Electoral Register

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many electors were on the electoral register in each year since 1979 for each district council and island council; [15407]

(2) how many electors were on the electoral register in each year since 1979 in each regional council and island council and in each sub-division in Strathclyde regional council. [15408]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for 1979 and 1980 is not held centrally. The electorate figures for 1981 to 1984 are set out in the table. The figures for 1985 to 1994 are detailed in the electoral statistics publications, compiled annually by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which are available in the House of Commons Library. Figures for 1995 are also available in this series, although they refer to the new unitary authorities. Information on each sub-division within Strathclyde regional council is not held centrally.

School Meals

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average number of students who took school meals in each academic year since and including 1979–80 in each education authority area in Scotland and in each sub-division in Strathclyde regional council; what percentage those taking school meals represented of the total number of pupils; how many students were in receipt of free school meals; and what percentage this represented of the total number of students taking school meals. [15409]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is given in the tables.

Scottish Water Consumers Council

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those persons appointed or to be appointed to the Scottish Water Consumers Council, indicating their length of tenure of office and remuneration. [15958]

Mr. Kynoch: The names of the chairman, vice-chairman and members of the Scottish Water and Sewerage Customers Council, their length of tenure of office and remuneration are as follows:

Chairman: Dick Douglas, three years, £15,000 per annum

Vice-Chairman: Professor Ian Percy, four years, £7,500 per annum

Members: Professor Tom Anderson, Ann Calman, Councillor John Connolly, Councillor Lynn Groundwater, Bill Howatson, Councillor Rhona Kemp, Neil Menzies, Councillor Alexander Scott and Ian Stewart. The late Angus Macdonald was also a member. All members were appointed for four years and receive remuneration of £3,000 per annum. The three members who also serve as area committee Chairman, Professor Tom Anderson, Councillor John Connolly and Councillor Rhona Kemp receive additional remuneration of £2,000 per annum to reflect their additional duties and responsibilities. These posts are for a period of a year.

Forestry Commission

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the sources of land purchased in Scotland by the Forestry Commission between (a) 1966 and 1970, (b) 1971 and 1980 and (c) 1981 and 1990 identified as (i) land purchased from private estates, (ii) land which formed part of crofting township common grazings and (iii) other Government-owned land. [16262]

Mr. Kynoch: The Forestry Commission does not maintain a central record of the sources of the land which it buys. This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Morgan: To as the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 13 January 1996, Official Report, columns 567–68, if he will give the total number of patients on general practitioners' lists in (a) fundholding and (b) non-fundholding practices in the area of each health board. [15974]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Health Service Charges

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the revenue from NHS charges for (a) prescriptions, (b) eye tests and (c) dental services in Scotland in (i) 1978 and (ii) 1995. [15887]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested in respect of NHS prescriptions and NHS general dental services is set out in the table. There is no revenue in respect of NHS sight test fees paid to optometrists. Charges paid by patients in contribution towards the cost of their NHS prescriptions and general dental services are offset against total Government funding of these services.

Toll Bridge Revenues

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total revenue from bridge tolls in Scotland in (a) 1978 and (b) 1995. [15888]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on revenue and crossings in the years requested is set out in the table.

Afforestation

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when a consultation paper will be issued on the amended environmental assessment regulations for afforestation. [15850]

Mr. Kynoch: The Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988 have to be amended to comply fully with Council directive 85/337/EEC. The amendments are technical in nature and will have limited practical effect. We shall decide on consultation when the revised regulations have been prepared.

Renewables Orders

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of Scottish renewables orders allocated in the first round of applications; and if he will list the names, locations and values of the orders allocated. [15306]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 19 February 1996]: Thirty projects were awarded contracts in December 1994 under the first order made within the Scottish renewables obligation. Their names and locations are listed in the table.

The value of each contract is a matter for the contracting parties.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small-scale hydro-development companies benefited from the first round of allocation of contracts under the Scottish renewables order. [15307]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 19 February 1996]: A total of 15 hydro projects from 12 individual companies were awarded contracts under the first order within the Scottish renewables obligation.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many small-scale hydro-development companies have made application to the Scottish renewables order in the second round. [15308]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 19 February 1996]: Under the second round within the Scottish renewables obligation, prospective developers have until 5 June 1996 to submit proposals to the Office of Electricity Regulation.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total amount of moneys which have accrued to date to the electricity utilities as a result of levies raised by the Scottish renewables order. [15309]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 19 February 1996]: To date no money has been collected in respect of levy arrangements linked to the Scottish renewables obligation.

Water and Sewerage Charges

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many responses were received by his Department in response to the consultation document on local authority billing and collection of unmeasured domestic water and sewerage charges on behalf of the new water and sewerage authorities; [16088]

(2) when he sent to consultees draft regulations under section 79 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 relating to the local authority billing and collection of unmeasured domestic water and sewerage charges; and if he will make a statement. [16089]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The department received 44 responses to the consultation paper which set out the Government's proposals on the new billing and collection arrangements. Consultees were sent the draft order mirroring these proposals on 15 December 1995. Responses to the consultation exercise have been considered and the Water Services Charges (Billing and Collection) (Scotland) Order 1996 was laid before the House on 19 February 1996.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pension Miscalculations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the total number of inaccuracies made in calculating (a) full and (b) partial retirement pensions in each of the last three years. [14749]

Mr. Heald: The administration of retirement pension is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Nicholson, dated 20 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what is his estimate of the total number of inaccuracies made in calculating (a) full and (b) partial Retirement Pensions (RP) in each of the last three years.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Benefits Agency provides statistics on the accuracy, in percentage terms, of the total of RP claims. These include details of Widows Benefit (WB) claims. Figures for full and modified rates are not separated for accuracy purposes.

The table below gives details of the accuracy achieved for RP and WB claims for the last three years.

	Percentage
Year	Accuracy
1992–93	98.6
1993–94	98.3
1994–95	98.1

Figures are provisional and subject to change. I hope you find this reply useful.

War Widows' Pensions

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the additional cost would be of allowing all claims currently received by his Department for the reinstatement of war widows' pensions to be backdated to 19 July 1995. [15440]

Mr. Heald: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received since 1 January 1995 about delays in payment of severe disablement allowance; how many he received in (a) 1993 and (b) 1994; and if he will make a statement. [15450]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fraud

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of progress on combating fraud. [14371]

Mr. Heald: Last July, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced his five-year security strategy which gives new emphasis to the prevention and deterrence of benefit fraud while continuing to improve investigation and detection methods.

We are pleased to announce that the new initiatives which include extra checks on claims and data matching, together with traditional fraud investigation methods, have so far saved in excess of £800 million this year and we are on target to save over £1 billion by the end of the year.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Building Repairs (West Yorkshire)

16. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she next intends to visit West Yorkshire to discuss repairs for school buildings. [14692]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to visit West Yorkshire.

Grant-maintained Schools

17. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many applications for grant-maintained status are currently being considered. [14693]

Mrs. Gillan: Twenty three proposals are under consideration at the moment.

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the relative performance of grant-maintained and local authority schools. [16716]

Mr. Robin Squire: The 1995 school performance tables show that nearly half the pupils in grant-maintained schools achieved five or more good GCSE passes, compared with 39 per cent. of pupils in local education authority schools. There was almost no difference in the performance of pupils in selective schools in the two sectors, but 45 per cent. of pupils in GM comprehensive schools achieved five or more good GCSE passes compared with 39 per cent. in LEA schools. Analysis of the GCSE performance tables over three years suggests that GM schools have made more progress than LEA schools in raising standards year on year. In the 1995 national curriculum assessments for seven, 11 and 14-year-olds, a greater proportion of pupils in GM schools achieved higher levels of attainment at each key stage. Detail are set out in the tables.

School Inspections

18. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she last met representatives of the Office of Standards in Education to discuss school inspections. [14694]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State met Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools on 8 February to discuss school inspections.

Teacher Morale

19. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent assessment she has made of the morale of class teachers. [14695]

Mr. Robin Squire: My colleagues and I keep in touch with teachers' morale through frequent visits to schools. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I believe that the great majority of teachers do a good job and take every opportunity to say so.

Schools Capital Spending

20. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the level of capital spending in schools in the financial year 1996–97. [14696]

Mrs. Gillan: Capital expenditure on schools for 1996–97 cannot be projected at this stage. It will depend on the level of self-financed expenditure by local authorities. Planned central Government support for capital work in maintained schools is nearly £700 million—a 6.7 per cent. increase on 1995–96.

Access to Work Scheme

21. Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received from organisations of and for disabled people in relation to the future of the access to work scheme. [14697]

Mr. Paice: The Department has received a number of representations from organisations of and for disabled people about the access to work programme.

Overseas Football Players (Work Permits)

22. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many work permits have been issued in each of the last three years in respect of overseas soccer players. [14698]

Mrs. Gillan: Information about the number of work permits issued in each of the last three years in respect of overseas soccer players is not available. The number of work permit applications for footballers received was 35 in 1993, 22 in 1994 and 65 in 1995.

Post-16 Education

23. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of 16-year-olds stay on in full-time education; and what were the figures in 1986. [14700]

Mr. Paice: Some 71.5 per cent. of 16-year-olds were in full-time education in 1994–95. This compares with 47.3 per cent. in 1985–86.

Campbells Soups

24. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she next intends to meet representatives of Cumbria training and enterprise council to discuss the implications of the closure of Homepride by Campbells Soups. [14701]

Mr. Paice: Cumbria TEC itself is well equipped to help Homepride employees. I know that the TEC is in regular contact with the company and is helping employees to retrain and to find new jobs. I therefore have no plans to meet its representatives.

Grammar Schools

25. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received about the future of grammar schools; and if she will make a statement. [14702]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend regularly receives letters and other representations from hon. Members and members of the public about grammar schools and selection.

English Language

26. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the aims of her campaign to improve the use of the English language. [14703]

Mr. Paice: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer that I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher).

School Standards

27. Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the measures she is proposing to take to boost overall standards in schools. [14704]

35. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action she is taking to raise standards in primary schools. [14713]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government have introduced a coherent programme of reforms designed to raise standards in all our schools, building on the national curriculum, regular inspection and the publication of performance information.

Schools (Music)

28. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action she is taking to promote the study of music in schools. [14705]

Mr. Paice: Music is a national curriculum subject and is compulsory for all pupils between the ages of five and 14 in maintained schools.

Education Funding (Northumberland)

29. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to meet Northumberland county council to discuss education funding. [17707]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to meet Northumberland county council to discuss what to do with the above average 5.5 per cent. increase in Northumberland's education standard spending assessment which the Government have provided for 1996–97.

School Leavers

30. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people who have left school and taken up a training place in the last three years are currently classified as (a) unknown and (b) unemployed. [14708]

Mr. Paice: Some 14 per cent. of young people completing youth training in 1994–95 were unemployed six months later. This has fallen from 18 per cent. the previous year and 20 per cent. the year before that.

Part-time Workers

31. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received about people who are currently working part time because they cannot find a full-time job. [14709]

Mr. Forth: No such representations have been made recently. People in Britain welcome the opportunities to choose between full-time and part time work. Only about 14 per cent. of people who work part time do so because they could not find a full-time job.

Employment Prospects (Europe)

32. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she next expects to meet her German counterpart to discuss employment prospects in Europe. [14710]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend expects to meet European Union Employment Ministers, including her German counterpart, at the next meeting of the Social Affairs Council on 29 March.

Compulsory Schooling

33. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the period of compulsory schooling in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other European Union countries. [14711]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is as follows:

Country	Period (age) of compulsory schooling
United Kingdom	5–16
Austria	6–15
Belgium	6–15 full time. Compulsory part time to 18.
Denmark	7–16
Finland	7–17
France	6–16
Germany	6–16 full time. Compulsory part time to 18
Greece	5.5–14.5
Ireland	6–15
Italy	6–14
Luxembourg	4–15
Netherlands	5–16 Part-time to 18.
Portugal	6–15
Spain	6–16
Sweden	7–16

Temporary Employment

34. Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the number of people who are currently in temporary positions because they cannot find a permanent job. [14712]

Mr. Forth: Latest figures show that about 650,000 people were in temporary jobs because they could not find a permanent job. As the table shows, a smaller proportion of the working population in the UK are in temporary jobs than in any other major European country.

Per cent.

Country	Proportion of temporary employees —1994
UK	6.3
Italy	7.3
Germany	10.2
France	10.9
Spain	33.6
EU 12 Average	10.9

Independent Nursery Schools

36. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to review the criteria for the registration of independent nursery schools. [14714]

Mr. Robin Squire: We have no plans to amend the provisions of the Education Act 1944 which define an independent school and the educational and other standards to be met for the purposes of registration. The registration under the Children Act 1989 of other independent nursery establishments is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

37. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the progress of nursery vouchers. [14715]

Mr. Robin Squire: Phase 1 of the voucher scheme is progressing well. Nearly two thirds of parents have returned their application forms. Over three quarters of eligible providers have joined the scheme.

Departmental Publications

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of her Department's administrative manuals and internal guidance are now made public; and which remain private. [14034]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department and its agencies are fully committed to the Government's code of practice on access to Government information, and in particular to the provision of information in response to specific requests.

In responding to such a request, in general, any information in an administrative manual or internal guide would be made available, unless it fell within the categories of exemption identified in the code.

The Department and its agencies, in particular the Employment Service, produce a large number of administrative manuals and documents of internal guidance, covering both external and internal work. They range in size from a single page to multiple volumes, and in lifespan from a few days to many years. It would be disproportionately costly and time consuming to identify all such publications in order to list them and to determine which fall in whole or in part within the exempt categories.

Handicapped Young People

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps her Department has taken to ensure that adequate training opportunities exist for young people between the ages of 16 and 18 years who (a) are disabled or (b) have learning difficulties and who have left special education or local authority care. [15208]

Mr. Paice: The Department contracts with training and enterprise councils in England to provide training leading to a range of outcomes tailored to individuals' needs. Additional payments are made for those whose training plan states and intended outcome below national vocational qualification level 2. The Government guarantee at least one offer of a suitable training place to all 16 and 17-year-olds who want one and are not in full-time education or a job. The guarantee is extended to those over 18 who have been prevented from completing or taking up a training place for a variety of reasons including disability or as a result of a care order.

Graduate Unemployment

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her oral answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 337, what are the raw statistics of numbers of employed and unemployed graduates on which she based her statement that unemployment among graduates has halved in the last year. [14828]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Pursuant to my oral answer, my statement should have read:

"unemployment among graduates here was half that facing people without degrees last year."

In 1995, some 152,000 graduates active in the UK labour force were recorded in the labour force survey as unemployed, out of a total of 3,656,000 economically active graduates. Of those without degrees, some 2,250,000 were recorded as unemployed out of a total of 23,866,000 economically active persons. At 4.2 per cent., unemployment among graduates last year was thus less than half that facing people without degrees, at 9.5 per cent. It is clear from those figures that degree courses are a waste neither of students' time nor of the taxpayers' money invested in them.

School Assemblies

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the quality of (a) school assemblies and (b) religious education in schools; and if she will make a statement. [15173]

Mrs. Gillan: Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools report for 1994–95, based on evidence from school inspections conducted during that academic year and published on 5 February 1996, provides an assessment of the quality of provision of religious education and collective worship in schools. Copies of the report are available in the House of Commons Library.

Employment Service Procedures

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what advice she has given on the procedure that should be adopted by Employment Service officials where a claimant has left an employer within 26 weeks of the claim, in order to obtain better pay and conditions, but is then made redundant by the second, employer, in circumstances where redundancy could not have been foreseen. [16057]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 21 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the procedures which should be adopted by Employment Service officials where a client has left an employer within 26 weeks of the claim, in order to obtain better pay and conditions but is then made redundant by the second employer, in circumstances where redundancy could not have been foreseen.

Current guidance for my people is that where a client makes a claim for Unemployment Benefit (UB), enquiries should be made of all employers that the client has worked for in the last 6 months.

When the replies are received, any doubts identified are referred to the independent adjudicating authorities for a decision. These authorities are, an adjudication officer who makes the decision, a Social Security Appeal Tribunal if the client wishes to appeal against the first decision and a Social Security Commissioner, if a further appeal is made on a point of law. The independence of these authorities prevent me from commenting on their decisions or intervening in the adjudication process.

I hope this is helpful.

School Budget Restrictions

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will receive a deputation to discuss the problems arising from school budget restrictions in the maintained schools sector in the constituency of the hon. Member for Harrow, East. [15877]

Mr. Robin Squire: It is for Harrow council to decide how to make best use of the 3.7 per cent. increase in its education standards spending assessment which the Government have provided for 1996–97. My right hon.

Friend and her ministerial colleagues are always willing to consider requests to see deputations led by hon. Members.

Further Education Colleges (Redundancies)

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the impact of redundancies among college lecturers on the quality of education available in further education colleges. [15998]

Mr. Paice: The Further Education Funding Council inspectorate has found no evidence that redundancies have adversely affected the quality of education provided by further education colleges.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list by college and region the numbers of redundancies of lecturers announced by further education colleges in the last year together with the reason given for the redundancies in each case. [15997]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is not collected by the Department.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to publish information about the income and expenditure of training and enterprise councils in England for 1994–95. [16717]

Mr. Paice: A training and enterprise council income and expenditure account has been published today. This account replaces the information previously shown in the class V, vote 1, appropriation account, under the column headed "Expenditure ultimately disbursed by TECs and others".

Opposed Legislation

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will publish a list of all the measures approved by Parliament since 1979 on standards of teaching and delivery of education in schools which were opposed by Her Majesty's Opposition (a) at Second or Third Reading, (b) in Committee and (c) on Report; and if she will make a statement; [13124]

(2) if she will publish a list of all the measures on parental choice, powers to school governors and parents on school management, which were approved by Parliament since 1979 but were opposed by Her Majesty's Opposition (a) on Second or Third Reading, (b) in Committee and (c) on Report; and if she will make a statement. [13125]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 6 February 1996]: The list of measures which the Opposition have voted against on Second Reading includes:

the Education Act 1980, which gave parents the right to express a preference for their choice of school, and the right of appeal against non-admission; required authorities to publish information on schools and admission arrangements; established the assisted places scheme; and created governors in primary schools;

the Education (No 2) Act 1986, which reformed school governing bodies and made provision for governors' annual reports to parents and annual parents' meetings;

the Education Reform Act 1988, which introduced the national curriculum, established grant-maintained schools; and introduced the provision of more open enrolment, which requires schools to admit up to their standard number;

the Education (Schools) Act 1992, which made provision for the inspection of schools and for information about schools and their pupils;

the Education Act 1993, which included a wide variety of provisions including the right of parents of children with statements to express a preference for a particular school; and provision to establish new grant-maintained schools;

the Education Act 1994, which established the Teacher Training Agency and made provision for schools to provide courses of initial teacher training.

A full list of all the measures approved by Parliament since 1979 on education, and opposed on Second and Third Reading, in Committee or on Report by Her Majesty's Opposition, is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The details of votes cast in parliamentary Divisions are a matter of public record, published in the Official Report.

Food and Drink Industry

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many people were employed in catering in the United Kingdom at the latest available date; [15317]

(2) how many people were employed in the United Kingdom at the latest available date in (a) the manufacturing of food and drinks, (b) the wholesale distribution of food and drink, (c) the retail distribution of food and drink and (d) the food and drinks industry in total. [15316]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The latest available information showing the number of jobs is provided in the following table:

Employees by industry in Great Britain: September 1995 (thousands) [1]

	Number

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Harrods

Mr. Hall: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the items that have been purchased by his Department from Harrods store, Knightsbridge, London and the cost price of each item since the establishment of his office. [16153]

Mr. Willetts: There have been no purchases by the Cabinet Office, including the Prime Minister's office and the Office of Public Service and its executive agencies, from Harrods since the establishment of the Deputy Prime Minister's office.

Policy Promotion Costs

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what is the total annual cost of the Government's promotion of each of the policies in each Department. [15315]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The information requested is not held centrally.

East Timor

Ms Lynne: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what consideration was given to the issue of human rights in East Timor during his meeting in January with the Indonesian Foreign Minister. [15444]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The issue did not arise at this meeting. However the Government's concerns over human rights and East Timor were raised with Mr. Alatas at ministerial level during the course of his visit.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily; [16182]

(2) if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16018]

Mr. Willetts: There are no executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by the Office of Public Service.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16642]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give their number or grades.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16576]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedure agreed with the Scott Inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give the cost of the work.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16592]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I first saw the report on 10 February 1996. Such access was in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what communication he received from the secretary of the Scott inquiry concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16635]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the answer given by the President of the Board of Trade today.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister at what hour and minute of what day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16544]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I was not one of the recipients of an advance copy of Sir Richard Scott's report. I first saw the report on 10 February 1996. Such access was in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of the letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16552]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I and my officials have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru, for example, about my evidence to the inquiry in February 1994. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16525]

The Deputy Prime Minister: A small number of civil servants in each of the main Departments concerned had access to the report prior to publication for the purpose of preparing the Government's response. Such access was in accordance with the conditions laid down by the Scott inquiry.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16565]

The Deputy Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what consultations he had with non-ministerial right hon. and hon. Members before the publication of the Scott report. [16467]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I had no such consultations after the receipt of the Scott report or on the Government's response to it.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16481]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Parliamentary Secretary.

DEFENCE

NAAFI

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further progress has been made on the independent review of the NAAFI. [15284]

Mr. Soames: The independent review has been concluded and a copy of Mr. Dart's report has been made available in the Library of the House. We will now carefully consider Mr. Dart's recommendations with a view to formulating an implementation plan in the near future.

Mr. Dart's stated aim was to ensure that NAAFI continue to provide a first-class service to our armed forces and the framework he provides in his report should ensure that NAAFI has every opportunity to do so.

Buy American Act

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warley, West (Mr. Spellar) on 13 February, Official Report, column 493, if he will describe the nature of the new restrictions. [16145]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The new US restrictions require a range of naval engineering and navigation equipment to be procured from domestic sources only, subject to certain limited waiver provisions. The new restrictions include the procurement of marine unique gyrocompasses, electronic navigation chart systems, steering controls, pumps, propulsion and machinery control systems. In addition, for a period of one year, new restrictions will apply to procurement of the main propulsion engines for the LPD–17 class of vessels and the emergency generator set for the new Attack submarine. These restrictions are renewable in future legislation.

Sir Derek Boorman

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Sir Derek Boorman sought permission to make public the information he disclosed on a television programme broadcast on 11 February. [15968]

Mr. Arbuthnot: None of the views expressed by Sir Derek in his interview would have required prior permission from my Department and he did not seek it.

Married Quarters Estate

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guarantees are being offered by his Department in respect of future rental income for the properties forming part of the married quarters estate which are currently being offered for sale. [16392]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As explained in the "Preliminary Information Memorandum", a copy of which was placed in the Library, the terms of the sale will include

"a government backed minimum cashflow in the form of a Guaranteed Payment providing a floor to rental income from the portfolio".

The guaranteed payment will be set by reference to the rent on the minimum number of properties MOD expects to occupy.

Army Technical Support Agency

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from (a) hon. Members, (b) local authorities and (c) trade unions concerning the proposed collocation of ATSA at Chertsey; and if he will make a statement. [16650]

Mr. Soames: In addition to those from a number of right hon. and hon. Members, my Department has received representations from the following local authorities and trade unions:

London borough of Greenwich

Broxtowe borough council

Malvern Hills district council

Melton borough council

Hereford and Worcester county council

Council of Civil Service Unions.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the overall cost (a) to his Department and (b) to the exchequer in the financial appraisal of the options concerning the future location of ATSA. [16652]

Mr. Soames: Various options are being considered for the future location of ATSA, including a "do minimum" option collocation at a number of different single sites and a joint site option. The building works and other relevant costs were incorporated into an investment appraisal of all the options considered over a projected 25-year period. This appraisal listed the options in order of cost, with the Malvern-Chertsey twin site the most expensive, and the Chertsey single site the least expensive over the 25-year period. We are now considering the results of the consultative process which ended on 19 February.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what appraisal he has made of the possible location of ATSA on (a) the Royal Arsenal east site and (b) the Royal Arsenal west site; and if he will make a statement. [16651]

Mr. Soames: The possibility of ATSA collocation in Woolwich was considered at an early stage in the study. The costs of providing the agency's office, technical, messing, and married quarters accommodation, however, were assessed to be higher than that for collocation at either Chertsey or Malvern. With this in mind, as well as the additional heritage and planning implications associated with many of the MOD's sites in Woolwich, and the fact that collocation there would not best satisfy the agency's business needs, it was decided not to subject a Woolwich collocation option to detailed scrutiny.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with English Partnerships regarding the future location of the ATSA based in Woolwich. [16653]

Mr. Soames: In view of the decision not to subject a Woolwich collocation option to detailed scrutiny, we did not specifically discuss with English Partnerships, the potential owners of the Royal Arsenal west site, the opportunities for ATSA's collocation in Woolwich. Nevertheless, our discussions with them and the London borough of Greenwich as to the future of the Royal Arsenal west site continue, with the aim of achieving a comprehensive solution for the transfer of the site into civilian use so as to maximise local employment prospects.

Naval Support Command Headquarters

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence further to paragraph 3.15 of the June 1995 consultation document, what is his latest estimate of the upfront capital costs for the additional building at Abbey Wood and the refurbishment of Ensleigh on the collocation of the naval support command headquarters at Abbey Wood/Ensleigh (Bath); at what cost opportunity costs for spare capacity at Abbey Wood were included in this estimate; and if he will make a statement. [16419]

Mr. Soames: Our estimate for the upfront capital cost for the additional building at Abbey Wood and the refurbishment of Ensleigh remains at about £40 million at 1995 prices and inclusive of VAT. The allowance for the opportunity cost of spare space at Abbey Wood separately included in the investment appraisal was based on the capital cost of the buildings concerned.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his current plans for the refurbishment of Ensleigh; what is his latest estimate of the cost of the refurbishment; what was the estimated cost in June 1995; and if he will make a statement. [16341]

Mr. Soames: Further work is being undertaken on the scope of the Ensleigh refurbishment programme following the decisions announced last September. Some refurbishment work is already under way. The estimate for the costs of the work is commercially confidential, but the estimate for the overall upfront capital costs of Ensleigh refurbishment and the new building at Abbey Wood remains about £40 million.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current estimate of (a) the number of staff who will seek household removal and (b) the cost of excess daily fares in respect of the collocation of the naval support command headquarters at Abbey Wood-Ensleigh (Bath); and if he will make a statement. [16342]

Mr. Soames: The consultation document on the NSC headquarters accommodation options assumed, in the appraisal of the Abbey Wood-Ensleigh option, about 100 house moves by Bath-based staff. The transport study which informed this assessment has recently been updated and the results will soon be available. No significant change is expected in the number of staff who may elect to move home. The latest estimate of the total cost of excess fares for the Abbey Wood-Ensleigh option is £5.8 million.

Mr. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his latest estimates of the costs of the collocation of the naval support command headquarters at Abbey Wood-Ensleigh (Bath); what are the significant changes from the cost estimates presented in the June 1995 consultation document; and if he will make a statement. [16343]

Mr. Soames: The net present value—NPV—figure for the costs of NSC relocation is £132 million at the latest price base. Other than the price base uplift, from 1994 to 1995 prices, there are no significant changes from the NPV figure presented in the consultation document.

Artillery Shells, Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will commission an inquiry into the underwriting of the export of artillery shells from British companies to Iran since 1985. [15625]

Mr. Oppenheim: I have been asked to reply.

Export licences for export of weapons to Iran have not been available since 1980, and therefore the ECGD would not have underwritten applications for export of artillery shells to Iran during the period since 1985.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16551]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My officials have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any documents he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communication he received from the secretary of the Scott inquiry concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16634]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer given to him by right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade earlier today.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16524]

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16575]

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16557]

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16566]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what hour and minute of what day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16541]

Mr. Arbuthnot: During the afternoon of Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16593]

Mr. Portillo: It was delivered to me on Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16482]

Mr. Arbuthnot: None.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parking Passes

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many current passes for the House of Commons car park have been issued to each category of persons entitled to such parking passes; how many places are for the use only of hon. and right hon. Members; and what were the equivalent figures in (a) 1988 and (b) 1993. [16093]

Mr. Michael J. Martin The information requested is as follows:

Category	Permit holders	Permits 1988	1993	1996
1	Right hon. and hon. Members (first, second and third floors)	606	638	633
2	Officers of the House (fifth floor)	112	118	123
3	Staff of the House with over 15 years service (certain spaces on the fourth and fifth floors)	25	63	61
4	Late night staff (certain spaces on the fourth and fifth floors)	280	279	284
4	Named members of the Press Gallery (certain spaces on the fourth and fifth floors)	18	18	16
5	Members' secretaries with over 15 years service (certain spaces on the third floor)	44	20	20
6	Permanent photo-identity pass holders on Fridays and non-sitting days only (fourth and fifth floors)	474	600	594

The number of places in the underground car park for the use of right hon. and hon. Members only has remained at 260 throughout this period.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16487]

Mr. Newton: No.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16490]

Mr. Newton: After 3.30 pm on Thursday 15 February.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Lord President of the Council how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16555]

Mr. Newton: I have had no communications from Mr. Muttukumaru.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Lord President of the Council what communication he received from the secretary of the Scott inquiry, Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru, concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16546]

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the President of the Board of Trade today.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16579]

Mr. Newton: After 3.30 pm on Thursday 15 February.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Disturbances

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 183, what information is available regarding payments for compensation and damages following disturbances in prisons in England and Wales over the past 10 years. [14963]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 13 February 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jim Dowd, dated 22 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your further Question about payments of compensation and damages to individuals following prison disturbances in the last ten years.

Compensation claims are dealt with either at local level or centrally depending on the size and nature of the claim. Information is available, from the financial year 1990/91, on the Prison Service's annual spend on compensation as a whole. It is not possible to identify the amount paid as a result of prison disturbances. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Party Conferences, Blackpool

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to reimburse the Lancashire police authority for the cost of policing political party conferences held in Blackpool. [16154]

Mr. Maclean: None at present, but Lancashire police authority has been told that we would be prepared to consider the special payment of police grant under section 31B of the Police Act 1964 for exceptional expenditure incurred in connection with safeguarding national security for the 1997 party conference. We would assess the case for a special grant in the context of the relative financial burden that the party political conferences impose on the force and in the light of the security situation prevailing at the time.

Mr. Mervyn Ritter

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list cases in which Mr. Mervyn Ritter has given evidence on behalf of the Crown against other prisoners while he was in prison. [16077]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Chris Mullin, dated 22 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question in which you asked him to list cases in which Mr. Mervyn Ritter has given evidence on behalf of the Crown against other prisoners while he was in prison.

There is no record of Mr. Ritter giving evidence on behalf of the Crown against other prisoners while he was in prison.

Arson

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arson attacks were reported to each police authority area in the last three complete years. [16147]

Mr. Maclean: The available information relates to offences of arson recorded by the police and is published annually in table 3.1 of "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary tables, Volume 3", copies of which are available in the Library.

Prison Service (Security Budget)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the Prison Service budget was spent on security for (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96; what is the projected percentage for 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [15903]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 21 February 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 22 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the percentage of Prison Service budget spent on security.

Estimates of current expenditure on security are not available. Staff in prison establishments are multi-functional and all are responsible for ensuring that security is maintained.

In most capital projects it is not possible to identify integral security costs.

Expenditure on overt security devices, for example perimeter walls and closed circuit television is recorded in the table below.

Percentage

	1993–94 Outturn	1994–95 Outturn	1995–96 Supply Provision	1996–97 Planned
Percentage of total capital expenditure	6.9	6.5	17.5	18.4

Prison Service (Market Testing)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce further market testing in the Prison Service; and if he will make a statement. [15904]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 21 February 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 22 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about market testing in the Prison Service.

The Prison Service remains committed to market testing as a means of improving quality and value for money in the provision of custodial services. We will shortly finalise our plans for the market testing of Prison Service establishments and of particular functions within establishments for the financial year 1996–97.

Emergency Plans

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding funding for dealing with the aftermath of disasters; and if he will make a statement on the responsibilities exercised by his Department in this area. [15615]

Mr. Sackville: None. The Home Office provides some funding to local authorities in England and Wales to assist them in their planning for major disasters—including peacetime disasters—however caused. But representations about the availability of funding to assist those authorities to deal with a disaster after it has happened should be made to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all emergency plans sponsored by local authorities during the last five years; and if he will make a statement on what plans he has to assist councils to retain emergency teams following the reorganisation of local government. [15616]

Mr. Sackville: The Home Office encourages local authorities to develop flexible emergency management arrangements which are capable of responding to any incident; but we do not require them to submit copies of the plans which they have made.

We have issued guidance to the new authorities suggesting how they might wish to approach planning for emergencies in the new situation created by the reorganisation of local government. Members of the Department's emergency planning division have also visited them to discuss the new arrangements.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16184]

Mr. Howard: (a) The following executive non-departmental public bodies—NDPBs—have a statutory base:

Alcohol Education and Research Council

Commission for Racial Equality

Data Protection Registrar

Gaming Board for Great Britain

Horserace Betting Levy Board

Horserace Totalisator Board

National Lottery Charities Board

Police Complaints Authority.

(b) None of executive NDPBs for which I am responsible admits members of the public to all board or committee meetings either under a statutory requirement or voluntarily.

(c) The Commission for Racial Equality holds conferences and seminars on race relations issues and the Data Protection Registrar holds meetings to discuss the operation of the Data Protection Act, but neither they nor any of the executive NDPBs for which I am responsible are under a statutory requirement to hold open meetings.

Kani Yilmaz

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Woolwich dated 18 December 1995, regarding the application for extradition in respect of Kani Yilmaz; and if he will make a statement. [16466]

Mr. Kirkhope: I replied to the hon. Member on 21 February.

Mohammed Akhtar

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the document referred to by the Home Office presenting officer at the appeal in Leeds by Mohammed Akhtar, Ref. A47642/3 (s); PO1 736/95. [16425]

Miss Widdecombe: It would not be practicable to place in the Library all the information on countries of origin available to presenting officers, since this is drawn from a wide range of sources. Where country reports summarising such information are prepared, they will be placed in the Library when finalised.

Prevention of Terrorism Legislation

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the report from Mr. J. J. Rowe QC on the operation in 1995 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989; and what conclusions he has reached on the future of the Act. [17300]

Mr. Howard: I have now considered Mr. Rowe's report which I have today placed in the Library and have decided to accept his recommendation that the legislation should be renewed in its entirety for a further 12 months. A draft order to give effect to that is today being laid before the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 February. [15165]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 22 February. [15166]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister what action he is taking to ensure that each Government Department lists in its annual report (a) what action it has taken in the past 12 months and (b) what it plans to do in the next 12 months to reduce the regulatory burdens on businesses. [15614]

The Prime Minister: The Government have agreed as part of their response to the deregulation task force's 1995 annual report, published in September 1995, that all governmental Departments will provide this information in their annual reports. It is for each Secretary of State to ensure that this happens.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his written answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 592, from what sources of information he assesses the record of Government against their targets for repealing or amending regulations. [16185]

The Prime Minister: I receive regular reports from the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on progress under the deregulation initiative. These incorporate information from individual Departments on their progress in repealing and amending regulations.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16553]

The Prime Minister: I and my officials have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru, for example, about my evidence to the inquiry in January 1994. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16564]

The Prime Minister: I do not envisage making such changes. Where officials criticised in the Scott report had acted conscientiously, in good faith and in accordance with Government policy, it would not normally be appropriate to take disciplinary action against them. If there are cases where disciplinary action is considered appropriate this would be carried out under normal departmental disciplinary procedure.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Prime Minister how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16556]

The Prime Minister: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give their number or grades.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations he had with non-ministerial right hon. and hon. Members before the publication of the Scott inquiry. [16465]

The Prime Minister: I had no such consultations on the contents of the Scott report or on the Government's response to it.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister if he will revise "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" following the report of the Scott inquiry. [16469]

The Prime Minister: "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" is updated from time to time as the need arises. That will continue to be the case.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister from which civil servants he took advice before making his decision not to permit members of opposition parties to see the report of the Scott inquiry until three hours before it was presented to the House. [16609]

The Prime Minister: Successive Governments have not disclosed the nature or the specific sources of the advice they receive from the civil service.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister when the Scott report was made available to the head of research at Conservative central office. [16422]

The Prime Minister: At 15.30 pm on 15 February 1996.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16595]

The Prime Minister: Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister what consultation he had with the Secretary to the Cabinet concerning the Government's response to the Scott inquiry; and where and when such consultations took place. [16605]

The Prime Minister: I have regular consultations with the Secretary of the Cabinet on current issues affecting the Government. These generally take place in 10 Downing street. Details of these consultations are private.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister when he first consulted other Cabinet Ministers about the contents of the report of the Scott inquiry; and where and when such discussions took place and with whom. [16517]

The Prime Minister: I have frequent meetings with Ministers at which we discuss Government business. These meetings usually take place in No. 10 Downing street. The details of such meetings are private.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16577]

The Prime Minister: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedure agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give the cost of the work.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister what communication he received from the secretary of the Scott inquiry, concerning the time needed by the opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16636]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the answer given to him by the President of the Board of Trade today.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister at what hour and minute of what day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16542]

The Prime Minister: During the afternoon of Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16522]

The Prime Minister: A small number of civil servants in each of the main Departments concerned had access to the report prior to publication for the purpose of preparing the Government's response. Such access was in accordance with the conditions laid down by the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Prime Minister on whose authority it was decided not to permit members of opposition parties to see the report of the Scott inquiry until three hours before the report was presented to the House. [16512]

The Prime Minister: The Government decided, in the light of precedents, that it was appropriate to allow access to Opposition spokesmen three and a half hours before the publication of the report.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all locations where a full set of the transcripts from the Scott inquiry are lodged. [15970]

The Prime Minister: Transcripts of oral evidence to the Scott inquiry are publicly available from Smith Bernal, Official Court Reports, 167 Fleet Street, London EC4A 2EA, tel. 0171 939 2266. I understand that copies are also available for public consultation in Westminster public libraries. Since transcripts of oral evidence were available to the general public I have no means of identifying the locations of all such transcripts.

Mr. Hall: To ask the Prime Minister how many photocopies the Government have made of the Scott report as of 13 February. [15703]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1996]: No photocopies were made of the report as a whole prior to publication. Photocopies of some sections of the report were made, in accordance with agreements reached with the inquiry.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Prime Minister which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16484]

The Prime Minister: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Environmental Appraisals

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many environmental appraisals were produced by her Department using the guidance contained in the Department of the Environment's "Policy Appraisal and the Environment" in 1995; and if she will place copies in the Library. [15111]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding reply 14 February 1996]: None.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16016]

Mr. Forth: The information requested is shown in the table:

Under-fives Provision

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to allow local education authorities to continue to fund under-fives provision directly through the local management of schools formula and to redeem vouchers on behalf of local providers under the nursery voucher scheme. [16284]

Mr. Robin Squire: Officials wrote to all chief education officers on 31 January to inform them that the proposed grant for nursery education in respect of local education authority maintained schools will be paid to local education authorities for distribution through their LMS schemes. LEAs will continue to be able to spend what they consider appropriate on provision for under-fives, taking the grant and other forms of revenue into account.

It will be for local decision whether LEAs participate in handling vouchers, or leave it to the schools they maintain.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list (a) the number of four-year-olds in maintained provision at January 1995, (b) the potential deduction from the under-fives standard spending assessment, based on the January 1995 pupil count, (c) the actual deduction agreed with the pilot authorities and (d) the criteria used to adjust the potential deduction to reach the actual deduction, including the pupil numbers involved, for each of the pilot authorities participating in phase one of the voucher scheme. [16285]

Mr. Squire: The Department's estimate of the number of four-year-olds in maintained provision in each of the phase 1 authorities in January 1995—taken from the annual schools census—is shown in the table, with the deduction from the 1996–97 standard spending assessment in each case.

LEA	Estimated number of 4-year-olds in maintained provision at January 1995	SSA deduction (£ million)
Kensington and Chelsea	800	0.7
Wandsworth	2,600	2.4
Westminster	1,100	1.0
Norfolk	6,300	6.8

The pupil numbers underpinning the deductions were adjusted to take into account local education authority comments on the January estimates and the number of four-year-olds in maintained provision in the autumn term 1994 and the summer term 1995 and the number of four-year-old pupils in maintained provision who were not resident in the LEA and who will not receive a voucher in phase 1.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16596]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I first saw the report of the Scott inquiry on the morning of Monday 19 February.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the members of her Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16520]

Mrs. Shephard: No members of my Department saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was published.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to her office. [16493]

Mrs. Shephard: The report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to my office at 2pm on Friday 16 February.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which Ministers in her Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16486]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

School Premises Regulations

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the progress of the revised school premises regulations. [17173]

Mrs. Gillan: Following my answer on 10 January—Official Report, column 274—I can confirm that new school premises regulations have been laid before Parliament today.

The new regulations will come into force on 1 September this year, when the transitional arrangements of the 1981 regulations expire.

The Government will publish an explanatory circular and two sets of guidance during the summer. The circular will explain the regulations in layman's terms; one guidance document will cover accommodation in schools and nurseries, the other will cover school grounds.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what changes she plans to cash limits on votes within her responsibility for 1995–96. [17174]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 1 February 1996 that the cash limit for class x, vote 1, schools, research and miscellaneous services will be reduced by £75,000 from £735,483,000 to £735,408,000. The cash limit will now be reduced by a further £900,000 to £734,508,000. The reduction will be used to offset an increase in the non-voted cash limit for local authority capital for school building projects—DFEE/LACAP. The local authority capital cash limit, DFEE/LACAP, will therefore be increased by £900,000 from £46,898,000 to £47,798,000.

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what plans she has to update the actuarial valuation of the teachers' superannuation scheme; [16348]

(2) what estimates she has made of catch-up contributions required to cater for the review of the teachers' superannuation scheme actuarial valuation. [16317]

Mr. Robin Squire: The valuation of the teachers' superannuation scheme is carried out by the Government Actuary and it is for him to estimate the contribution required. My right hon. Friend is awaiting the Government Actuary's report on the valuation of the scheme as at 31 March 1991, which she expects early in 1996–97.

TREASURY

Tax Relief and Allowances

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) of 22 May 1995, Official Report, column 469 on revenue costs of tax reliefs and allowances, to give figures for 1996–97. [14401]

Mr. Jack: Estimated full-year revenue costs at 1996–97 income levels are in the table. Separate costings have been produced for allowances and reliefs. The combined cost of both allowances and reliefs would be greater than the sum of the individual figures.

Cost of allowances and reliefs

£ billion

Group of taxpayers	Allowances	Reliefs
Top 1 per cent.	0.4	0.8
Top 5 per cent.	2.2	2.1
Top 10 per cent.	4.3	3.0
Top 25 per cent.	8.6	4.4
Top 50 per cent.	15.4	6.2
Top 70 per cent.	20.8	7.0
All taxpayers	28.1	7.4

Exchange and Trading Schemes

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many local exchange and trading schemes have been established in the United Kingdom; and how many members they have. [15429]

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of local exchange and trading schemes which have been established in the United Kingdom, and the number of members they have, is not available.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16175]

Mrs. Angela Knight: There are no executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Treasury.

Seized Alcoholic Drinks

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy in respect of disposal of seized alcoholic drinks and tobacco products. [17172]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs has carried out a review of its policy on the disposal of seized excise goods. The policy to destroy small seizures of alcohol, in an economic and environmentally satisfactory manner, will continue. For individual large seizures of alcohol Customs will, wherever possible, continue to sell the goods back to the original UK manufacturer. The policy to destroy all tobacco seizures will continue. A copy of Customs' review report has been placed in the Library of the House.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the factors included under the heading "other elements" contributing to ECGD exposure in Nigeria and Brazil as outlined on page 6 of the annual report of ECGD. [15174]

Mr. Oppenheim: The other elements are made up entirely of claims paid not yet recovered.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each year since 1988 the total amount of claims paid by ECGD broken down to show those paid in respect (a) Iraq, (b) Jordan, (c) Nigeria, (d) Oman, (e) Indonesia, and (f) other countries in the Gulf Co-operation Council group. [15177]

Mr. Oppenheim: The following is the information:

Claims paid by ECGD in £ millions by financial year from 1 April 1988

Country	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	[1]1995–96
Indonesia	5	5	3	2	0	1	1	4
Iraq	28	56	193	181	104	61	46	14
Jordan	1	28	49	50	46	41	36	31
Nigeria	291	242	157	131	98	48	28	5
Oman	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0
Other countries in Gulf Co-operation Council group	5	3	12	7	0	0	0	0

[1] To 31 January 1996.

Export Credits Guarantee Advisory Service

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent of 20 January 1994, Official Report, columns 748–50, on membership of the exports credits guarantee advisory service. [15623]

Mr. Nelson: There have been no further appointments to the Export Credits Guarantee Advisory Council since 20 January 1994. The following members, however, how now retired from service:

A. G. Gormly, Esq., CBE

C. Smallwood Esq.

Sir Robert Davidson

Sir Frank Lampl.

Further appointments will be made in due course.

Iraq (Petroleum)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the role played by Crescent International Petroleum in trading with Iraq. [15967]

Mr. Nelson: No.

Post Office

Mr. Rooney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what were the main components of the pay off to the former chief executive of the Post Office; [15915]

(2) what early retirement or voluntary severance schemes are currently in place for employees of the Post Office; [15916]

(3) what were the principal factors in his decision to approve the early retirement of the chief executive of the Post Office. [15924]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 19 February 1996]: The details of the payments made to Mr. Cockburn, the former chief executive, on leaving the Post Office were set out in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) on 5 December 1995, Official Report, column 162. The Post Office is responsible for the early retirement and voluntary severance schemes in place for its employees.

There are two principal pension schemes in operation within the Post Office: the Post Office staff superannuation scheme and the Post Office pension scheme. Mr. Cockburn is a member of the former. The provisions and administration of each are the responsibility of the Post Office and the trustees.

Mr. Cockburn left the Post Office board when his three year appointment to it expired in October 1995. Although offered renewal of his contract on existing terms, he decided after 34 years in the Post Office, 14 of them as a member of the Post Office board, to seek a new challenge in the private sector. I did not approve the early retirement of Mr. Cockburn; this was a matter for him and the Post Office under the terms of his original appointment to the board.

Nigeria (Arms Exports)

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that no arms are exported to Nigeria from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other EU states, under licences which were granted prior to the current embargo; and if he will make a statement. [16260]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 21 February 1996]: At the end of last year, the European Union decided to strengthen its measures against the military regime in response to adverse developments in Nigeria. Among these measures was strengthening of the existing restrictions on the sale of military equipment, though there was no agreement to extend these measures to existing contracts and therefore export licences which were issued against those contracts were not revoked.

So far as future exports are concerned, in common with arms embargoes against other countries, the embargo against Nigeria will include all military, security and paramilitary goods and arms, ammunition and related material which is listed in group 1 of part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, available from HMSO. The rules do not distinguish between items intended for the military and for the police, nor has any exception been allowed for international peacekeeping operations in which the Nigerians might be involved.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many wind turbines were erected in (i) each year since 1993, (ii) 1994, (iii) 1995 and (iv) 1996 to date. [16417]

Mr. Page: The number of wind turbines erected in the United Kingdom under the non-fossil fuel obligation—in England and Wales—the Northern Ireland non-fossil fuel obligation, NI-NFFO, and the Scottish renewables order, SRO, are as follows:

Year	NFFO 1 and 2	NI–NFFO 1	SRO 1	Total
1991	13	—	—	13
1992	113	—	—	113
1993	247	—	—	247
1994	54	20	—	74
1995	15	30	26	71
Total	442	50	26	518

There are also some small-scale wind turbines in domestic use, and some single large-scale wind turbines erected outside the non-fossil fuel obligation and other obligations arrangements. Data on their number could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Capita Managed Services Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the terms on which the contract to collect the costs awarded against directors disqualified from managing a limited company was awarded to Capita Managed Services Ltd. [16275]

Mr. Oppenheim: The contract has been awarded for an initial period of three years commencing on 1 December 1995. The terms themselves are a matter of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the process by which Capita Managed Services Ltd. was awarded the contract to collect the costs awarded against directors who are disqualified from acting in the management of limited companies. [16273]

Mr. Oppenheim: An advertisement setting out details of the service requirement and calling for expressions of interest was placed in "Government Opportunities". Respondents were asked to complete a pre-qualification questionnaire. On the basis of the replies a short list of six was drawn up and formal tenders issued. The bid from Capita Managed Services Ltd. represented best value for money and the contract was awarded accordingly.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16177]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is as follows:

Those non-departmental public bodies which:

(a) Have a statutory base:

All except the National Consumer Council, the Simpler Trade Procedures Board and the Design Council, the latter being established by royal charter. The research councils are also established by royal charter, a prerogative instrument, but are governed by the Science and Technology Act 1965 which imposes statutory duties in areas such as production of an annual report and keeping of accounts.

(b) Admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings:

None.

(c) Hold open meetings for the public:

None except the research councils who from time to time voluntarily hold open meetings.

In both (b) and (c) it is voluntary and not a statutory requirement for all DTI NDPBs.

Small Businesses

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the impact of Government policies upon small businesses in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [15236]

Mr. Page: The Government are fully committed to supporting the small firms sector and recognise the key role that it plays in the economy.

After reductions in the number of businesses in the early 1990s, there was a net increase in the number of businesses operating in England and Wales in both 1994 and 1995. Policy for small firms focuses mainly on providing a favourable economic climate—based on low inflation and stable interest rates in which enterprises can flourish. The Government are also concentrating on reducing administrative and regulatory burdens thereby enabling businesses to get on, unimpeded, with running their businesses.

The Government also provide direct assistance to small firms.

The establishment of the business link network now provides a single point of access to a wide range of information and services to small and medium-sized firms in England. Early indicators are that firms welcome these services and are impressed by the quality of provision.

In shaping their policy the Government are listening to the voice of small firms through the regional "Your Business Matters" conference and will take careful account of the report to be presented at a national conference on 11 March.

The small business ministerial group will have a significant effect on small firms by providing a forum for developing co-ordinated and cohesive policy across Whitehall Departments.

Greyhound Breeding, Ireland

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the hon. Member for Wentworth will receive an answer to the question of 30 November, about the support of greyhound breeding in Ireland by the EC. [13126]

Mr. Oppenheim [pursuant to his reply, 7 February 1996, c. 232]: The current objective 1 programme of EC structural funds grants for the Republic of Ireland, which covers the period 1994 to 1999, includes three relevant measures: a quality breeding scheme, including purchase of breeding greyhounds from abroad; grant towards the cost of marketing greyhounds; and grant towards breeding premises for various animals including greyhounds. Intended totals of grant for the three schemes are IR£300,000, IR£353,000 and IR£7.5 million respectively. The first two schemes have not yet begun. Under the third scheme, IR£38,000 has so far been paid in respect of premises for greyhounds.

I understand that no information is available about the number of greyhounds to be bred or, therefore, the cost per animal.

I shall be glad to consider the matter further if the hon. Gentleman wishes to write to me.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what communication he received from the secretary of the Scott inquiry, concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16545]

Mr. Lang: Correspondence on this issue was copied by the Scott inquiry to spokesmen for the main Opposition parties. This makes it clear that Sir Richard was glad to note the arrangements made for giving advance access to Opposition spokesmen. The Government do not propose to deposit copies of the correspondence in the Library of the House.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16470]

Mr. Oppenheim: None.

Biotechnology and Biological Research Council

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about forthcoming prior options reviews of institutes sponsored by the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council. [17213]

Mr. Taylor: The Government announced on 29 September 1995 that all public sector research establishments would be subject to prior options reviews. I announced on 24 November reviews of BBSRC-sponsored institutes concerned with agriculture and plant sciences.

Reviews are now beginning of the BBSRC's arrangements for sponsoring the Babraham Institute, the Institute for Animal Health and the Roslin Institute.

These reviews will take place alongside those of establishments parented or sponsored by other Government Departments which are carrying out work in similar or related fields. The reviews will build on any relevant recent studies.

I should welcome comments from interested parties. Comments should be sent by 8 April 1996 to:

Dr. Susannah Bolton, Institute of Arable Crops Research, Rothamsted, Harpenden, Herts AL5 2JQ in respect of the Babraham Institute;

Dr. David L. O. Smith, Silsoe Research Institute, Wrest Park, Silsoe, Bedford MK45 4HS in respect of the Institute for Animal Health; and

Dr. Vincent Essex, BBSRC, Polaris House, North Star Avenue, Swindon SN2 1UH in respect of the Roslin Institute.

Internet

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when it is planned that the British library will make available on the Internet information on British patents, trade marks, registered designs, and information from the Official Journal. [16216]

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

The British library has no plans to make available on the Internet information on British patents, trade marks, registered designs, an information from the Official Journal.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if (a) Ministers and (b) officials of his Department were present at the international exhibition for military production held in Baghdad in 1989. [15695]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 February 1996]: Some officials serving at the British embassy in Baghdad attended the exhibition. No Ministers were present.

Western Sahara

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings concerning the future of the Western Sahara have been attended by representatives of Her Majesty's Government (a) at the UN and (b) elsewhere in the past year; and if he will make a statement. [15933]

Mr. Hanley: Programmes for official visits to the UN mission for the referendum in Western Sahara—MINURSO—from the UK and elsewhere have usually included visits to refugee camps in Algeria under MINURSO auspices. Most recently, officials from the foreign and Commonwealth Office visited camps in Tindouf in October 1995.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the UN Security Council concerning the performance of MINURSO in registering potential voters in the referendum on the future of the Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement. [15934]

Mr. Hanley: We have expressed concern in the UN Security Council at the slow rate of progress in registering voters in the referendum on the future of the Western Sahara. The Secretary-General has reported that he will monitor the situation closely and bring the matter to the Security Council's attention if the situation showed no or very little sign of improvement.

We remain supportive of the efforts of the UN Secretary-General and of MINURSO. We continue to urge all parties to proceed with the referendum process as quickly as possible.

Guatemala

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings have been held by representatives of Her Majesty's Government with the new Government of Guatemala; and if he will make a statement. [15930]

Mr. David Davis: Lord Chesham met President Arzu on 15 January when he visited Guatemala City for the President's inauguration. We continue to encourage the Government of Guatemala to reach a peace agreement with the URNG guerrillas and a settlement of the territorial dispute with Belize.

Antarctic Treaty

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet signatory nations to the Antarctic treaty concerning the establishment and siting of the secretariat; and if he will make a statement. [15935]

Mr. David Davis: There are no immediate plans for Ministers to meet Antarctic treaty signatories to discuss this issue. The Antarctic treaty secretariat will be the subject of discussion at official level at the forthcoming Antarctic treaty consultative meeting in the Netherlands on 29 April to 10 May.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has recently held with the Argentine Foreign Minister concerning the siting of the secretariat to the Antarctic treaty; and if he will make a statement. [15936]

Mr. Davis: The siting of the Antarctic treaty secretariat was raised by the Argentine Foreign Minster during bilateral meetings on 15 December 1995 and on 30 January 1996. He was informed that our position remained unchanged.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16590]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary first saw the report on Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16574]

Mr. Hanley: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned, in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a range of issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give the cost of the work.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16504]

Mr. Hanley: The report was delivered to my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary during the afternoon of Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16644]

Mr. Hanley: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a range of issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not, therefore, possible to give their number or grade.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16527]

Mr. Hanley: A small number of civil servants in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office had access to the report prior to publication for the purpose of preparing the Government's response. Such access was in accordance with the conditions laid down by the Scott inquiry.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the hon. Members referred to in paragraph D4.3 of the Scott report who received letters couched in the terms described in paragraph D4.2. [16468]

Mr. Hanley: Mrs. G. Dunwoody MP, B. Field MP, M. Wolfson MP, C. R. Gregory MP, I. Stewart MP, R. Rhodes James MP, A. Haselhurst MP, Sir G. Finsberg MP. D. Curry MP, N. Griffiths MP, J. Patten MP, D. Atkinson MP, Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman MP, J. Redwood MP, C. Wardle MP, S. Bell MP, D. Alton MP, M. Jones MP, R. Tracey MP, T. Rathbone MP, D. Sumberg MP, R. Moate MP, M. Grylls MP, C. Hawkins MP, K. Baker MP, N. Winterton MP, Dr. A. Williams MP, Rt hon. Tony Benn MP, Rt hon. Peter Shore MP, Sir H. Rossi MP and M. Lord MP.

Some received more than one letter.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communication he received from the secretary to the Scott inquiry concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16633]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade today.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of the letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16550]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and FCO officials have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16479]

Mr. Hanley: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

India and Pakistan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his letter of 27 October, Ref: 2712002, was circulated to the Home Secretary; when he reached a decision that India and Pakistan should be added to the list of designated countries; on what date he told the Home Secretary of his decision in respect of India and Pakistan; if he will place in the Library copies of the material he considered in reaching his decision in respect of India and Pakistan; and if he will make a statement. [16433]

Mr. Hanley: It is not the practice to disclose ministerial correspondence between Departments. This is consistent with long-standing conventions of confidentiality observed by successive Governments.

Ethiopia, Kenya and Tanzania

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date he notified the Home Secretary of his decision about the designation of Ethiopia, Kenya and Tanzania; what was his decision in respect of each country; and if he will place in the Library copies of the material on which he reached his decision in respect of each country. [16432]

Mr. Hanley: It is not the practice to disclose ministerial correspondence between Departments. This is consistent with long-standing conventions of confidentiality observed by successive Governments.

European Funds (Public Health Education)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that European Commission funds are prudently allocated in the field of public health education. [15835]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

Following a decision by the Health Council, management committees have been established to oversee European Commission programmes of action on public health, including AIDS and communicable diseases. Officials on the committees representing UK Health Departments will seek to agree criteria to ensure that Community funds are prudently allocated for individual projects.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding was given by the Europe against AIDS unit of the European Commission to enable CSV Media to send St. Valentine's day cards containing condoms to right hon. Members; how many such cards were sent out throughout Europe; what was the purpose of this project; what percentage of the funding came from United Kingdom taxpayers; and what factors led the European Commission to (a) support this project and (b) accept no liability for the advice so disseminated. [15833]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

The European Commission contributed £145,000 towards the cost of this campaign which included the distribution of 330,000 Valentine's day cards throughout Europe. The purpose of the campaign was to promote AIDS awareness and safer sex amongst young people.

The United Kingdom Government made no direct contribution to the cost of the campaign, and it is therefore not possible to say what percentage of the funding came from UK taxpayers. We understand that the European Commission supported the project because of rising levels of HIV infection in Europe, and that the disclaimer on the Valentine's day card is a standard clause which the Commission require on all printed material which they fund.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to propose the abolition of the AIDS unit of the European Commission; and if he will make a statement. [15836]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

I have no such proposal.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he had with the European Commission prior to the decision being taken to proceed with the CVS Media project. [15834]

Mr. Horam: I have been asked to reply.

I have had no consultations with the European Commission on this subject.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16640]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what communication he received from the secretary of the Scott inquiry concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16637]

Mr. Evans: I have received no communication from the secretary of the Scott inquiry concerning the time needed by Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16500]

Mr. Evans: The report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to my office at approximately 3 o'clock on the afternoon on Friday 16 February.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16586]

Mr. Evans: I first saw the report of the Scott inquiry after it was published.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of the letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16639]

Mr. Evans: I have received no communication from Christopher Muttukumaru.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16643]

Mr. Evans: Access to the report itself was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give their number or grades.

Mrs. Kennedy: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much he estimates was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott report. [16645]

Mr. Evans: Access to the report itself was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give the cost of the work.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16531]

Mr. Evans: No member of this Department saw Sir Richard Scott's report before it was presented to the House.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16475]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, column 242.

Asylum and Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he will place in the Library copies of the draft procedural rules concerning asylum and immigration currently subject to consultation; and if he will make a statement. [16261]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Revised asylum appeals procedure rules are being prepared in the light of the recommendations in the report by the consultancy firm

KPMG Peat Marwick. The draft rules will be submitted to consultation and a copy placed in the Library as soon as the preparatory work has been concluded.

Legal Aid

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many representations (a) his Department and (b) the legal aid service has received in each of the last five years alleging that legal aid was being received by litigants or contestants of cases who were not qualified to receive it; and if he will make a statement on the measures his Department takes to ensure that legal aid goes only to those who qualify. [15449]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The legal aid assessment office of the Benefits Agency assesses the means of applicants for civil legal aid. In November 1990, it set up a special team to investigate representations alleging abuse of the scheme. Since that date it has received the following representations.

	Number
November 1990–March 1991	754
April 1991–March 1992	2,775
April 1992–March 1993	5,394
April 1993–March 1994	8,783
April 1994–March 1995	11,402
April 1995–March 1996	[1]15,000

[1] Anticipated.

A small number of these representations will originally have been channelled through my Department. All applications for civil legal aid are scrutinised carefully by the Legal Aid Board to ensure that the case has merit, and the legal aid assessment office to ensure that the applicant's means are within the prescribed limits. Allegations that legal aid is being received by those who do not qualify for it are investigated thoroughly.

Unlawful Legislation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many judgments handed down by the High Court in each year since 1987 have held that provisions of (a) primary and (b) secondary legislation were unlawful, giving in each case the sponsoring Department of the legislation and the court's reasons. [15648]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 22 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your Question about High Court judgments.

The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Access to Children (Grandparents)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has to give grandparents a legal right to have access to their grandchildren. [15471]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Under the Children Act 1989, grandparents can already apply to a court for an order granting them contact with their grandchildren. The leave of the court is usually required to make such an application. In considering any application, the paramount consideration for the court is the welfare and best interests of the child.

War Disability Pensions

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department on how many occasions appeals by former officers in the armed services were heard by war disability pension tribunals in Newcastle in each of the last three years; how many cases were heard on each occasion; how many sittings he expects in 1996; and where else such hearings of this sort are heard in the north of England. [15465]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Tribunal sittings at Newcastle	Officer cases heard on each occasion
1993	2	1
1995	1	5

The level of sittings at Newcastle depends on the number of appeals due to be heard there. There are currently five outstanding officer cases at Newcastle and at the present rate of such appeals the pensions appeal tribunals expect to arrange two sitting days at Newcastle in 1996.

Officer cases are also heard at the following venues in the north of England: Chester, Leeds, Manchester and Middlesbrough.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nursery School Places

9. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new nursery school places will be created in Northern Ireland during 1996. [15027]

Mr. Ancram: Current plans are for 150 new full-time equivalent places, in Belfast and Londonderry.

Action for Community Employment Scheme

10. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the application of policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines to the funding of the action for community employment scheme. [15029]

Mr. Ancram: Policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines have been applied to decisions regarding the funding of the action for community employment programme. The effect of the reduction in funding should not have a differential impact on the overall balance of the programme to PAFT target groups.

Peace Process

11. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the peace process in Northern Ireland. [15030]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Neath (Mr. Hain) and for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing).

13. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what recent meetings he has had with the Irish Deputy Prime Minister to discuss the peace process; [15032]

(2) what recent meetings he has had with Irish Ministers regarding the peace initiative. [15042]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Mr. Spring and I met at a two-part meeting of the Anglo-Irish intergovernmental conference which met initially in London on 1 February and concluded in Dublin on 7 February. Amongst other things we conducted an extensive review of all recent developments in the peace process.

23. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received concerning the Mitchell report; and if he will make a statement. [15043]

Sir John Wheeler: The Government have received a number of written and oral representations since the publication of the international body's report; these are being considered. The Government have welcomed and accepted the report, and intend to discuss its recommendations with the Northern Ireland parties.

18. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on the role of an elected body in the Northern Ireland peace process. [15038]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have received views on this proposal from a wide range of sources.

Elected Convention

12. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made towards the establishment of an elected convention in Northern Ireland. [15031]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: In the absence of decommissioning, we believe that a broadly acceptable elective process represents one alternative direct way forward to all-party negotiations. We are continuing to explore the acceptability of these ideas with the relevant parties.

Northern Ireland Committee

14. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for a greater use of the Northern Ireland Committee. [15034]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: We are considering proposals that the procedures and remit of the Northern Ireland Committee should be developed in line with those of the Scottish and Welsh Grand Committees; but this could be done only after consultation with the Northern Ireland parties and any such arrangements would need to be reviewed if there were agreement leading to the establishment of new locally-accountable institutions in Northern Ireland.

Politically Motivated Violence

15. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents of politically motivated violence, with specific reference to punishment beatings and killings, have taken place since the publication of the Mitchell report. [15035]

Sir John Wheeler: The report of the international body was published on 24 January and since that date—up to 13 February—there has been one death in Northern Ireland resulting from terrorist activity. During this period there have also been 17 casualties resulting from so-called punishment attacks. Of these, nine have been attributed to loyalist and eight to republican groups.

Housing

16. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the resource provisions for housing in Northern Ireland for 1995–96 and 1996–97. [15036]

Mr. Moss: The overall gross resources available for housing in Northern Ireland in 1996–97 are some £605 million which is £6 million more than in 1995–96.

Aerospace Industry

19. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the prospects for the aerospace industry in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [15039]

Mr. Ancram: The aerospace industry in Northern Ireland is dominated by Short Brothers, owned by Bombardier, the Canadian company. Should the current crisis at Fokker not be resolved, jobs would be lost at Shorts but the company would not be at risk. It is a highly regarded cost competitive partner in many global ventures. Should Fokker continue in production, Shorts would be a serious contender for more contracts.

Interviews (Tape Recording)

20. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the tape recording of interviews with terrorist suspects; and if he will make a statement. [15040]

Sir John Wheeler: The Government have concluded that it would be possible to introduce silent video-recording of interviews with terrorist suspects, and my right hon. and learned Friend has recently announced his intention to do so. Provision for the silent video-recording of interviews with terrorist suspects was included in the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Bill at Report stage on 19 February.

However, after serious consideration the Government have concluded that it would not be right to introduce audio recording of interviews with terrorist suspects in Northern Ireland, given the serious risks to life were the tapes subsequently to come into the public domain.

This measure will be a further addition to the wide range of safeguards already in place in the holding centres.

Public Appointments

21. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to ensure that public appointments are balanced and representative. [15041]

Sir John Wheeler: Public appointments are made in accordance with the guidelines on public appointments in Northern Ireland which were revised in October 1995. These advise that public bodies should, as far as possible, reflect a broad community, gender, age and geographical balance. Appointments are, however, made on the basis of an individual's ability or potential to make a positive contribution to the work of the particular body concerned.

The recently appointed Commissioner for Public Appointments in Northern Ireland—and in the rest of the United Kingdom—Sir Len Peach, will audit the public appointments process to ensure that it is operating in a fair and proper way.

Campbell's Soups

24. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received about the boycott of Campbell's Soups in Northern Ireland. [15044]

Mr. Ancram: The hon. Member's representation to me in the House on 7 December is the only one of which I am aware.

Employment and Economic Development

25. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he is having with trade unions about the future of employment and economic development of Northern Ireland. [15045]

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has useful, wide-ranging discussions with representatives of the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions about employment and other matters, most recently when he met them on 19 December 1995.

Ceasefire

26. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the level of observance of the ceasefire by organisations previously engaged in terrorism in the Province; and if he will make a statement. [15046]

Sir John Wheeler: The recent terrorist incidents in London, where three people lost their lives and scores of people have been injured, is a stark reminder of what terrorists are capable of.

During the ceasefire period, terrorist organisations continued to engage in various criminal activities such as murder, punishment beatings, robberies and racketeering. They also continued to train and to target individuals and installations.

The police have a good clear-up rate for terrorist crime and will make arrests whenever possible.

Free School Transport

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the costs of free school transport in Northern Ireland; what assessment he has made of the research; and what policy proposals he has on free school transport. [15463]

Mr. Ancram: No independent research has been commissioned. In 1992 the Department of Education established a joint Department/education and library board working party to review the arrangements for the provision of assisted home-to-school transport in Northern Ireland and, as a result of this, arrangements were put in place to monitor on-going costs. A consultation paper outlining a number of options for reducing the escalating costs of transport was issued in December 1995.

This consultation is on-going. In the interim, the existing arrangements remain unchanged.

Pupil Performance

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what comparison he has made of the relative performance of pupils studying GCSEs and A-levels in Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom. [15028]

Mr. Ancram: Annual comparisons are made between pupil performance in Northern Ireland and England and Wales. Latest available comparison shows 87 per cent. of A-level pupils in Northern Ireland achieving at least two A-levels compared with 81 per cent. in England and 76 per cent. in Wales, and 51 per cent. of Northern Ireland pupils achieving five or more good GCSE grades compared with 44 per cent. in England and 41 per cent. in Wales.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16180]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is as follows:

Executive Bodies: Department of Agriculture (NI)

(a) DANI NDPBs which have a statutory base	(b) Admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings	(c) Hold open meetings for the public	(i) Statutory requirement	(ii) Voluntarily

In respect of all other executive non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland, the answer is nil.

Secondary School Pupils

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of secondary school children in Northern Ireland attend grammar schools. [15026]

Mr. Ancram: Forty per cent. of secondary age pupils attend grammar schools.

All-party Negotiations

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress towards all-party negotiations on Northern Ireland. [15033]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Government have been engaged in a series of intensive meetings with all the relevant parties to discuss their ideas on the way forward. Our aim is to achieve all-party negotiations leading to a comprehensive and widely acceptable political settlement in relation to Northern Ireland. These discussions are continuing.

Registration of Clubs Order

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received regarding article 43 of the Registration of Clubs (Northern Ireland) Order 1996. [15017]

Mr. Moss: Up to 13 February, eight letters of complaint had been received.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has commenced his review of the Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland. [17299]

Mr. Moss: The civil service White Paper, "Continuity and Change", published in 1994, introduced five-yearly reviews for next steps agencies such as the Ordnance Survey for Northern Ireland, OSNI. The first such review of the agency by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has now begun.

The review process will entail a thorough evaluation of the performance of the agency since its launch and a reappraisal of the various prior options, that is, abolition, privatisation, contractorisation, market testing and opportunities for rationalisation and merger.

Comments and contributions will be sought from those with an interest in OSNI and its work by 12 April 1996.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many IACS claims in the last year for which figures are available were (a) submitted and (b) paid in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the Yorkshire and Humberside region; how many of these claims were received after the deadline date and then paid; and what was their value. [15912]

Mr. Baldry: Details of IACS applications submitted in 1995 are as shown in the table:

	UK	Northallerton RSC[1]
Number of IACS applications submitted	149,693	11,837
Number of IACS applications approved for AAPS payments or for processing of livestock payments[2]	149,556	11,833
Number of IACS applications received after 15 May 1995 but before 6 June 1995[3]	1,497	91
Number of IACS applications received after 6 June 1995[4]	185	12
Value of payments made on late applications[5]	Details not readily available

[1] The figures shown for Northallerton regional service centre cover applications for Cleveland, Durham, Yorkshire and Humberside. Specific details for the Yorkshire and Humberside region are not readily available.

[2] The IACS area aid application forms the claim for arable area payments and the declaration of forage area in support of claims under the livestock schemes. Additional separate applications are required for claims under the beef special premium and suckler cow premium schemes and for hill livestock compensatory allowances.

[3] IACS applications received after 15 May but before 6 June 1995 receive reduced payments of 1 per cent. of entitlement to arable area aid and/or livestock premium for each working day that they are late.

[4] Applications received after 6 June 1995 lose entitlement to all aid or premium for each scheme that the application is related to. However, applicants for the beef special premium and suckler cow premium schemes may still be entitled to aid limited to 15 livestock units.

[5] Arable area payments and payments under livestock schemes are made separately. The value of payments linked to a late IACS application is not readily available, and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he received the dossier from Channel 4's "Dispatches" programme; and if his officials are conducting an investigation into the allegations that a local veterinary inspector failed properly to inspect calves being exported through Dover; [14418]

(2) if (a) Mr. Jonathan Stirling is and (b) other veterinarians working on his behalf are still acting as local veterinary inspectors in connection with the export of live farm animals. [14472]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 9 February 1996]: Documents have been received from Channel 4 over a period of time concerning the allegations made in the "Dispatches" programme. An inquiry into those allegations has been instigated by this Department. Mr. Stirling is still designated as a local veterinary inspector, as are other members of his practice, and continues to carry out his duties at the export lairages under close Ministry supervision.

Sheep Farmers

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has made of the number of persons entering sheep farming for the first time for each year since 1990; and what estimate he has made of the number and percentage who were over 40 years of age at the time. [15956]

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry does not collect information on the age and number of persons entering sheep farming and consequently no basis exists on which to make estimates.

Fish Farming

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the current financial contribution to the economy of the fish farming industry. [16047]

Mr. Baldry: In 1994, the output of the UK fish farming industry was worth some £250 million at first sale.

Chernobyl (Compensation)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total amount of compensation paid by the Government to farmers in the United Kingdom in respect of the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement. [16323]

Mrs. Browning: As at 31 January 1996, the total amount of compensation paid under the sheep compensation scheme by the Government to farmers in the United Kingdom in respect of the Chernobyl disaster has been £12,096,842. The scheme was introduced in July 1986 to compensate farmers whose enterprises had been disrupted as a result of movement and slaughter restrictions associated with the Chernobyl accident.

Salmon Season

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the National Rivers Authority on the likely effect of delaying the start of the salmon season for (a) net and (b) rod and line fisheries; what recommendations he has received; and what further advice he has sought on this matter from the authority. [16427]

Mr. Baldry: In 1994, the Government's salmon advisory committee published a report on the run timing of salmon which, among other things, recommended that consideration be given to the protection, and perhaps enhancement, of early running salmon, particularly in stocks where spring runs have suffered the most acute decline. Actions that it suggested might be appropriate included additional controls of exploitation in both commercial and sport fisheries. Following publication of the report, my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, asked the National Rivers Authority to consider urgently whether, and if so what, action was needed to conserve the runs of spring run salmon in the fisheries for which it is responsible. In this context, he also asked the authority to reconsider the recommendation, in the report on salmon net fisheries presented to Parliament in 1991, that the opening date for the drift net fisheries of Northumbria and Yorkshire should be postponed until 1 May so as to reduce the level of exploitation of spring run salmon. Copies of the NRA's response to this request and my subsequent reply have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Rustling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the incidence of rustling from United Kingdom farms. [16048]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

Neither the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food nor the Home Office has made such an assessment.

TRANSPORT

Train Cancellations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what percentage of trains were cancelled on each of the former Network SouthEast lines in each four-week period during 1995. [14558]

Mr. Watts: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Train Delays

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what percentage of trains arrived more than five minutes late during peak hours on each of the former Network SouthEast lines in each four-week period during 1995. [14557]

Mr. Watts: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

South Eastern Trains

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken by British Rail to advertise to likely bidders the need for new rolling stock for South Eastern Trains; and if he will make a statement. [15767]

Mr. Watts: The franchising director has asked specifically for tenders to include proposals for the provision of rolling stock for the full franchise term, including firm proposals for either replacement or life extension of the class 411 rolling stock. The franchising director has also indicated that, where proposals are made for investment in new rolling stock, he will be prepared to consider extending the term of the franchise from the time at which the replacement rolling stock is committed irrevocably.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16024]

Mr. Norris: Listed below are the answers for each of the Department of Transport's non-departmental public bodies.

Trinity House Lighthouse Service—THLS:

(a) is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner.

(b) [1]is subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission.

(c) [1]is subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

(d) the statutory provisions for open government do not apply.

(e) a system of performance indicators is currently the subject of discussion and should be implemented soon.

(f) is encouraged to follow the principles of the citizen's charter.

Northern Lights Board—NLB:

(a) is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner.

(b) [1]is subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission.

(c) [1]is subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

(d) the statutory provisions for open government do not apply.

(e) a system of performance indicators is currently the subject of discussion and should be implemented soon.

(f) is encouraged to follow the principles of the citizen's charter.

London Regional Passengers Committee:

(a) is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner.

(b) is not subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission.

(c) is subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

(d) the statutory provisions for open government do not apply.

(e) has no performance indicators.

(f) is not subject to the provisions of the citizen's charter.

Traffic Director for London:

(a) is subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner.

(b) [1]is not subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission.

(c) [1]is subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

(d) complies with the code of practice on open government.

(e) has performance indicators.

(f) is subject to the provisions of the citizen's charter.

[1]Audit arrangements are set out in "Public Bodies 1995", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16176]

Mr. Norris: Listed below are the answers for each of the Department of Transport's non-departmental public bodies.

Trinity House Lighthouse Service—THLS:

(a) has a statutory base;

(b) there is no statutory right for the public to attend board;

(c) there is no statutory requirement to hold open meetings in public.

Northern Lights Board—NLB:

(a) has a statutory base;

(b) there is no statutory right for the public to attend board;

(c) there is no statutory requirement to hold open meetings in public.

London Regional Passengers Committee:

(a) has a statutory base;

(b) there is no board to which the public could be admitted;

(c) no open meetings, as such, are held but voluntary arrangements were made to enable members of the public to attend meetings at the time of public consultation for the red route proposals.

Traffic Director for London:

(a) has a statutory base;

(b) there is no statutory right for the public to attend board;

(c) there is no statutory requirement to hold open meetings in public.

BR Vendor Unit

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the sales completed by the BR vendor unit, with the name of purchaser and price paid in each case. [16228]

Mr. Watts: The sales completed by the British Railways Board are listed below. Those where the BR vendor unit has been involved are marked with an asterisk.

Gross proceeds from the sale to date of businesses sold by BR amount to some £304 million. As explained in the Government's response of 14 December 1995 to the Transport Committee's fourth report, on railway finances, it would be contrary to the commercial interests of British Rail and the Government to publish details of individual sales at this stage, as that may prejudice similar sales still in progress. Details of individual sales completed will be made public in due course.

In addition to that figure, the sale of the rolling stock leasing companies, which was handled by my Department, realised £1,822.23 million.

Train Carriages (Telephones)

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute consultations with the railway companies for the provision of no-telephoning carriages on trains. [16421]

Mr. Watts: No. Any restrictions on the use of telephones on trains is a matter for train operators.

Colney Hospital, Norfolk

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions have been held between the Highways Agency and (i) the Norfolk and Norwich Health Care trust and (ii) the prospective developer of the proposed Colney hospital to discuss the possibility of an interchange on the A47 Norwich southern bypass; what response has been given by the agency; what is the estimated cost of such an interchange; and what advice the agency has given to the health care trust on the traffic implications of the proposed hospital for the A47 and A11 trunk roads if no such interchange was constructed. [15644]

Mr. Watts: There has been no direct approach by the Norfolk and Norwich Health Care trust or the prospective developer of the proposed Colney hospital to the Highways Agency or its predecessor, the Department of Transport, about the possibility of an interchange on the A47 Norwich southern bypass.

However, the Highways Agency is opposed to the proposal for an additional interchange. It would encourage the use of the bypass by local traffic to such an extent as to undermine its role as a trunk road route for longer distance traffic. It would also present engineering and road safety difficulties.

No design work or survey has been carried out by the Highways Agency and therefore no estimate of the cost of an interchange can be given.

South Norfolk district council has been asked to ensure that the Highways Agency is consulted when the planning application for the proposed hospital is submitted and that a traffic impact statement, TIS, be prepared by the developer covering the effect of generated traffic on the bypass and relevant junctions.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each metropolitan district council (a) the number of accommodation units in council ownership, (b) the total projected annual income from these units, (c) the rent arrears for each of the last three years, (d) the total amount of council tax billed (e) the total amount of council tax arrears, (f) the total amount of community charge arrears and (g) the council's annual spend on managing its estates; what (i) guidance and (ii) incentives have been given to these authorities to reduce the levels of arrears; and if he will make a statement. [14912]

Mr. Curry: I have today placed in the Library a table detailing the requested information on the latest relevant basis for each metropolitan district council in England.

The Government expect local authorities to pursue all arrears of rent, community charge and council tax that are collectable. It is in the interests of authorities to do so to restrict their level of borrowing and council tax bills overall. Authorities have a range of powers enabling them to enforce recovery of rent arrears, community charge and council tax arrears. They use these powers at their discretion and my Department has provided general guidance through practice notes and other advice. For example in October 1994 a research report "Rent Arrears in Local Authorities and Housing Associations" was issued by the Government to all local authorities; this contains good practice advice on preventing and managing rent arrears.

The Government have introduced a range of measures to encourage authorities to maximise revenue collection, for example the ring-fencing of housing revenue accounts, penalising poor performers in the distribution of housing investment programme allocations and requiring publication of arrears information under the citizen's charter performance indictor regime set up by the Audit Commission.

French Local Government

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake an assessment of the contracte de ville system of local and central Government relations in France; and if he will make a statement on its applicability to the United Kingdom. [15171]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government have no plans to carry out a formal assessment of the French contracte de ville system. However, we keep abreast of this and related policies in other countries through regular informal contacts and published literature. This includes a research study entitled, "Management Innovations in Urban Policy: Lessons from France" undertaken for the Local Government Management Board (1994).

Environment Agency (Women)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to find suitably qualified women to become members of the regional committees of the Environment Agency. [15620]

Mr. Clappison: As with all public appointments, individuals are selected on merit, which is in accordance with the recommendations of the Nolan committee. Before appointing the chairmen of the regional environment protection advisory committees in England, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State invited interested people to put forward nominations. He is taking full account of the contribution women can make to the committees. We would expect the agency and other appointing authorities to take similar account in making their appointments.

Recycling

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimates of the percentage of (a) paper, (b) glass, (c) aluminium and (d) iron currently recycled in the United Kingdom; and what are the Government's targets for 2000. [15535]

Mr. Clappison: In 1993, the percentage of waste paper, glass, aluminium and iron recycled in the United Kingdom was as follows: paper; 32 per cent. glass, 29 per cent.; aluminium, 29 per cent. and iron, 42 per cent. The figures are expressed as a proportion of consumption and encompass all sources of these materials.

The EC directive on packaging and packaging waste sets an overall recovery target for packaging waste of 50–65 per cent. with an overall recycling target of 25–45 per cent., and a minimum of 15 per cent. for each material, to be achieved by 2001. The Government's producer responsibility initiative has led to a number of industries setting themselves re-use and recovery targets, to be achieved by 2000. These include recycling 58 per cent. of packaging waste, recycling 50 per cent. of aluminium cans and 37 per cent. of steel cans, recycling 50 per cent. of glass containers and recovery of 90 per cent. of end-of-life vehicles. It is anticipated that these targets will contribute substantially to raising the overall recycling rates for paper, glass, aluminium and iron.

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what official data are collected to identify proportions of waste recycled by (a) material and (b) local authority. [15434]

Mr. Clappison: No official data are collected centrally at present. However, information on the proportions of materials recycled is collated by relevant trade associations. Summaries of these data, where their provenance is clear, are published by the Department in the "Digest of Environmental Statistics". Information on local authority recycling is collated by a range of organisations, including the Audit Commission.

In line with the targets set in "Making Waste Work", the Government's strategy for sustainable waste management, the Department is working with the Environment Agency, local authorities and other organisations to improve the quality of information available centrally.

Pollution Monitoring

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of full-time employees involved in the United Kingdom in monitoring (a) air pollution, (b) water pollution and (c) solid waste disposal. [15534]

Mr. Clappison: This information is not available in the form requested. However, the Environment Agency, covering England and Wales, expects to have transferred to it on 1 April 1996 the following numbers of inspectors:

(a) 277 from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution;

(b) 545 from the National Rivers Authority; and

(c) 986 from local waste regulation authorities.

The figures for Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Environment Agency

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members and qualifications of the board of the Environment Agency; and what steps have been taken to inform industry and the public about the forthcoming work plan of the agency. [15621]

Mr. Clappison: Membership of the board is:

Lord De Ramsey (Chairman)
Sir Richard George (Deputy Chairman)
Peter Burnham
Professor Ronald Edwards
Imtiaz Farookhi
Edward Gallagher
Nigel Haigh
Christopher Hampson
Councillor John Harman
Mrs. Karen Morgan
John Norris
Derek Osborn
Dr. Anne Powell
Mrs. Joan Wykes.

My right hon. Friend has announced his intention to appoint an industrialist to the remaining vacancy.

Full information is not held centrally about individual members' formal qualifications.

Prior to vesting on 1 April, the agency has had extensive contact with industry, environmental interest groups, local authorities and other public bodies about its role and plans. A formal launch was held on 6 February. The agency is currently preparing its corporate plan for 1997–98, which will include data for 1996–97. This will be published in the summer.

The agency will be inviting comments from all interested parties to inform its future strategies and plans. In addition, the agency is contacting businesses to provide them with contact points.

Government Buildings (Groundwater Damage)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to protect Government buildings in London below London Underground level from damage caused by rising groundwater; and if he will make a statement. [15977]

Sir Paul Beresford: A study of groundwater levels around Whitehall from 1989 to 1995 was initiated by the Construction Industry Research and Information Association and taken over by Property Holdings. It concluded that water levels rose and fell with the seasons but did not indicate any long-term rise in groundwater levels.

Very few Government office buildings have basements extending down to the level of the London Underground bored tube railways.

Basements of all buildings are inspected regularly so that early sign of water penetration can be detected and dealt with. As far as we are aware, no building is currently in any imminent danger from rising groundwater.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16015]

Sir Paul Beresford: The executive non-departmental bodies sponsored by my Department are listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1995". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Tuesday 25 April 1995, Official Report, column 474–75. Since then, Letchworth garden city corporation has ceased to be a public body and Leeds development corporation has been wound up. Otherwise, the position in respect of the bodies covered by that answer remains unchanged.

Two new executive NDPBs have been established since April 1995, and my Department has taken on responsibility for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. The local government residuary body is subject to the scrutiny of the Audit Commission. The Health and Safety Commission and Executive and the Environment Agency are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office. All four bodies are subject to the scrutiny of the Parliamentary Commissioner and are expected to adopt a code of practice on open government, have key performance measures and abide by the citizens charter.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base and which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16031]

Sir Paul Beresford: A list of my Department's executive non-departmental public bodies can be found in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1995". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library. All of these except the National Forest Company and the British Board of Agrément have a specific statutory base. None of my Department's executive NDPBs is under a statutory requirement to admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings. There is a statutory right for members of the public to attend meetings of the regional committees of the National Rivers Authority that discuss flood defence, fisheries and rivers issues except where business is of a confidential nature.

All six housing action trusts voluntarily hold board meetings which are open to the public except when confidential issues are discussed. The following urban development corporations voluntarily hold open meetings when considering planning applications: Birmingham heartlands, black country, Bristol, London docklands, Merseyside, Plymouth, Sheffield and Trafford park.

Outer Estuarine Limit (Humber River)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will review the outer estuarine limit of the Humber; and when he expects to announce the result of that review. [14975]

Mr. Clappison: The National Rivers Authority has been asked to review the basis for establishing estuary boundaries for the purposes of the urban waste water treatment directive and advise my Department accordingly. It is envisaged that the Secretary of State will announce the results by the summer of this year.

Colney Hospital, Norfolk

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when planning consent was granted by him for a second district hospital at Colney in South Norfolk district; when that permission expired; and if a new planning application will need to be referred to him. [15641]

Sir Paul Beresford: Planning approval for a second district hospital at Colney in South Norfolk district was granted on 5 December 1988 and expired in December 1993. There are no proposals currently in front of the council, but as the adopted local plan makes provision for such a development, it is unlikely that any new planning application would need to be referred to my right hon. Friend.

Planning Policies

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning policies concerning the location of facilities with wide catchment areas have been introduced since 1988. [15642]

Sir Paul Beresford: Planning policy guidance note 13—PPG13—on transport, which was published in 1994, addresses the location of major travel generating developments. PPG13 advises that facilities with wide catchment areas should be located so that they are well served by public transport and as accessible as possible to those who need to use them. Other planning policy guidance notes have been issued since 1988 which address the location of specific types of development relative to transport provision.

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the sequential test for location of employment and traffic-generating activities set out in his planning policy guidance note 6 applies to the location of hospitals where a local planning authority considers a planning application for a new hospital. [15643]

Sir Paul Beresford: Our draft revised PPG6 suggests that a sequential approach should apply to key town centre uses which attract a substantial number of people. This will include hospitals in many instances.

Agenda 21

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources have been deployed by his Department to ensure compliance with the requirements of agenda 21 of the Rio de Janeiro summit; and if he will make a statement. [15944]

Mr. Clappison: It is one of my Department's main objectives, through the implementation of the United Kingdom sustainable development strategy, to ensure effective follow-up to agenda 21 and the agreements reached at the Earth summit in Rio de Janeiro in June 1992. The United Kingdom plays a leading role in international fora, such as the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development and the environmental conventions, in helping to promote agreement on tackling global issues identified by agenda 21. The United Kingdom report to the Commission on Sustainable Development of 1996 gives details of estimated expenditure by the Department on sustainable development. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to co-ordinate local agenda 21 activities; which local authorities have reported that they are unlikely to be able to report on their plans by December 1996; and if he will make a statement. [15945]

Mr. Clappison: My Department welcomes and supports the local agenda 21 process. I understand that the Local Government Management Board, on behalf of the local agenda 21 steering group, has invited local authorities to send their local agenda 21 action plans agreed with their local communities to it by the end of 1996, and that response so far from UK local authorities has been good. Authorities are not obliged to report their progress to my Department, but we will continue to be interested in the progress being made.

Global Warming

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's current estimate of the increase in global average temperatures over the next (a) five and (b) 10 years; and what were the estimates by his Department in each of the past five years. [15941]

Mr. Clappison: The 1995 second scientific assessment from the intergovernmental panel on climate change—IPCC—suggests that the underlying rise in global average temperature will be about 0.1-0.2 deg C over the next decade. The actual temperature changes will be strongly affected by natural variability. The comparable estimate in the fist IPCC scientific assessment in 1990 was 0.3 deg C per decade; the 1995 estimate is lower because it has taken into account the cooling effect of aerosols produced by man-made sulphur dioxide emissions.

Contaminated Land

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total tonnage of contaminated land in brownfield sites as reported by local authorities in England and Wales. [15782]

Mr. Clappison: Local authorities are not required to report the area or volume of contaminated land to the Department.

Atmospheric Pollution

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the initiatives being taken by his Department to reduce levels of (a) carbon dioxide, (b) sulphur dioxide and (c) methane in the atmosphere; and if he will make a statement. [15937]

Mr. Clappison: The United Kingdom climate change programme, published in January 1994, set out a full list of the measures being taken to return emissions of carbon dioxide and methane in the UK to 1990 levels by 2000. A progress report on carbon dioxide emissions was published in December 1995.

The UK published its programme and national plan for meeting its commitments under the EC large combustion plant directive to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions by 60 per cent. by 2003 compared with levels in 1980. We have agreed under the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe protocol further to reduce total sulphur dioxide emissions from all sources by 80 per cent. by 2010 compared with 1980 levels. My Department will issue a consultation paper on the UK's strategy for meeting these targets shortly.

Upper Atmosphere (Volcanic Dust)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the effect of volcanic dust in the earth's upper atmosphere and the equivalent information for 1990 and 1985. [15938]

Mr. Clappison: The effect on global climate of volcanic dust in the upper atmosphere in 1995, 1990 and 1985 was too small to be identified.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the level of ozone depletion over the Antarctic and Arctic; what estimates he has made of ozone levels for (a) 2000 and (b) 2005; and if he will make a statement. [15939]

Mr. Clappison: Stratospheric ozone depletion occurs primarily in the spring. In 1995, the total amount of ozone was some 50 to 60 per cent. below normal over the Antarctic in October, and 20 to 30 per cent. below normal locally in the Arctic in March. In 2000 and 2005, total amounts of ozone in the Antarctic are expected to be similarly below normal, but may be up to 10 per cent. further below normal in the Arctic.

During the next 50 years ozone levels are expected to return slowly to normal as a result of actions being taken under the Montreal protocol.

Sea Levels

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of mean sea levels for each five year period since 1965; and what estimates they have made for mean sea levels for (a) 2000 and (b) 2005. [15940]

Mr. Clappison: The second scientific assessment of the intergovernmental panel on climate change estimates that the global mean sea level has risen steadily by 18 cm over the past century. Over the next decade the underlying rise is projected to be in the range 1 to 5 cm, although large natural variability at particular measurement sites will make this difficult to detect on this timescale.

Yorkshire Water

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what are the terms of reference of his departmental review of Yorkshire Water; when the review begun; when it is expected to end; to whom will the conclusions of the review will be presented; if he will place a copy of the review in the Library; and if he will make a statement; [16429]

(2) what plans he has to give (a) oral and (b) written evidence to the Yorkshire Water commission of inquiry chaired by Professor John Uff; [16431]

(3) if he will make available the main conclusions of his Departmental review of Yorkshire Water to the commission of inquiry established by Yorkshire Water and chaired by Professor Uff. [16430]

Mr. Clappison: My Department is not conducting a review of Yorkshire Water.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has discussed with Professor Uff the inquiry which he has been asked by Yorkshire Water to conduct into the water supply situation in Yorkshire. Officials have provided him with published details setting out the programme of work being undertaken as part of the Department's wider review, but Ministers do not expect to be asked to give evidence.

My right hon. Friend announced on 1 September a review of water resource arrangements in England and Wales in co-operation with the National Rivers Association, the Office of Water Services and the water industry. Work on this is continuing and we expect to publish its findings later this year.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16526]

Mr. Gummer: None.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16591]

Mr. Gummer: On Thursday 15 February at 5.15 pm.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what hour and minute of what day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16543]

Mr. Gummer: Copies of the report were collected from the Vote Office in the House of Commons just after 3.30 pm on Thursday 15 February. I received two further copies later that day.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16480]

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister earlier today, column 242.

Zoo Licensing Act 1981

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the Zoo Licensing Act 1981. [17298]

Mr. Clappison: In consultation with the Scottish and Welsh Offices, my Department is about to embark on a review of the operation of this Act, which provides for a system of inspection and licensing of zoos in Great Britain. Views are being sought from the relevant local authority associations and other interested bodies. The review will also provide an opportunity to consider the European Commission's proposals for a recommendation on zoos, which are currently being considered by the Environment Council.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list estimated total emissions of carbon dioxide for the United Kingdom in each year from 1980 to the present. [15583]

Mr. Clappisaon: The estimated United Kingdom annual emissions of carbon dioxide from 1980 to 1994 are:

	Million tonnes of carbon
1980	163
1981	157
1982	153
1983	151
1984	147
1985	153
1986	157
1987	158
1988	158
1989	155
1990	158
1992	155
1993	151

Data on UK carbon dioxide emissions are published annually in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" and "UK Greenhouse Gas Emissions Inventory". Estimates from 1990 use the methodology developed by the intergovernmental panel on climate change: those for earlier years are on a comparable, but slightly different, basis used by the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe. Figures on the IPCC's methodology are not available for the earlier years.

Oyster Beds

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, columns 480–81, if he will list each native oyster bed according to its size in (a) percentage terms, (b) tonnage terms and (c) square area in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the EU ranked from largest to smallest. [15552]

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

In England and Wales areas which produce native oysters—O. edulis—and which will include in some cases more than one native oyster bed, are as follows:

Area	Size in percentage terms	Square area (km)
Solent	38.00	93.00
North Kent Coast	30.50	75.00
Crouch	13.00	31.00
Poole	2.80	7.00
Portsmouth Harbour	2.50	6.00
West Mersea	1.60	4.00
Chichester Harbour	1.60	4.00
Langstone Harbour	1.50	4.00
Porthcawl	1.40	3.50
Percuil and Helford	1.30	3.00
Falmouth	1.00	2.50
Southampton Water	1.00	2.00
Roach	1.00	2.00
Swale	1.00	2.00
Milford Haven	0.70	2.00
Plymouth	0.70	2.00
Walton Backwaters	0.10	0.30
Butley	0.10	0.30
Medina	0.05	0.10
Truro	0.05	0.10

Information on tonnage of native oysters harvested from these areas is not available.

In Scotland the principal native oyster bed is situated in Loch Ryan and extends for some 9 sq km. In 1994, around 130 tonnes were harvested from this site. In Northern Ireland native oysters are cultivated at Strangford lough and Dundrum bay. The area of production is negligible and the quantity harvested is not available.

Information on oyster beds in other member states of the EU is not available.

SCOTLAND

Agricultural Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments he expects to be made in Scotland in 1995–96 for set-aside of between (a) £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000, (j) £150,001 and £200,000 and (k) over £200,001. [15335]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The distribution by size of payments against set-aside claims under the 1995 arable area payments scheme is not yet available as not all payments have been made in those cases where non-food crops have been grown on set-aside land. However, my noble Friend the Minister will write to the hon. Member when the figures requested are available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments he expects to be made in Scotland in 1995–96 under the arable area payments scheme between (a) £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000, (j) £150,001 and £200,000 (k) £200,001 and £250,000 (l) £250,001 and over. [15322]

Mr. Robertson: The distribution by size of total payments against claims under the 1995 arable area payments scheme is not yet available as the final oilseeds payments and some payments on non-food set-aside for the year have not yet been made. However, my noble Friend the Minister will write to the hon. Member when the figures are available.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many classes had (a) more than 30 pupils and (b) more than 35 pupils; what was the total number of classes within each authority; and what percentages (a) and (b) represented of the total number of classes for each education authority in Scotland and for each education division within Strathclyde for each academic year since 1979. [15715]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: As the information requested is lengthy I shall arrange for copies of it to be placed in the Library of the House.

Court Service

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many High Court prosecutions have been conducted by the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor-General for Scotland in each of the last five years. [15721]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no central record of the number of occasions on which Lords Advocate or Solicitors General for Scotland have represented the Crown in criminal proceedings. However, both the present office holders and their predecessors have appeared for the Crown in High Court trials and criminal appeal hearings. They have done so on numerous occasions, when their parliamentary and other duties have permitted.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Morgan) of 13 February 1996, Official Report, column 567, if he will list for each year and each health board the percentage of fundholding practices. [16044]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Glenochil Prison

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will conduct an inquiry into the actions of the Crown Office and Prison Service in respect of court proceedings following disturbances at Glenochil prison. [15441]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has considered a report from the trial advocate depute. He is satisfied that the decision to prosecute those charged with involvement in the riot at Glenochil prison on 4 and 5 January 1994 was correct and that the trial was conducted properly. The Crown Office and the Scottish Prison Service are examining whether this case has implications for the handling of future cases.

Palace of Holyroodhouse

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how often the palace of Holyroodhouse has been occupied by a member of the royal family during the past three years; and what other use is made of the palace. [16200]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The palace was occupied by members of the royal family on 65 days during the three years 1993 to 1995 and on 24 days by the Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. The palace was open to the public on most other days except for a few days before and after visits by the Queen and the Lord High Commissioner and for the first eight weeks of 1993 during reinstatement following the meeting of the European Council held at the palace in December 1992. Within the palace are the apartments of the hereditary keeper.

Fisheries

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for financial assistance under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance have been approved since 1 July 1994; and what is their grant value. [16286]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: One hundred and one applications to the value of £11.5 million in grants have been approved under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance since 1 July 1994.

HEALTH

Thalidomide

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospital trusts which have purchased the drug thalidomide directly or indirectly from companies in Brazil. [15898]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16013]

Mr. Horam: The information is as follows.

Those NDPBs that are:

Subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner are:

Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work;

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority;

Medical Practices Committee.

Subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission are:

English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting;

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

Subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office are:

Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work;

English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting;

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority;

National Biological Standards Board;

National Radiological Protection Board;

Public Health Laboratory Services Board.

Subject to statutory provisions for open government are:

Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work;

English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting;

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

Subject to performance indicators are:

Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work;

English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting;

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority;

National Biological Standards Board;

National Radiological Protection Board;

Public Health Laboratory Services Board.

Subject to provisions under the Citizen's Charter:

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16183]

Mr. Horam: The information is as follows:

Those non-departmental public bodies:

Which have a statutory base are:

Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work;

English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting;

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority;

Medical Practices Committee;

National Biological Standards Board;

National Radiological Protection Board;

Public Health Laboratory Services Board.

Which admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings:

(i) under a statutory requirement—none;

(ii) voluntarily—Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work.

Which hold open meetings for the public:

(i) under a statutory requirement—none;

(ii) voluntarily—English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many square feet of offices there are at (a) the Yorkshire regional health authority headquarters at Park parade, Harrogate and (b) the Northern regional health authority headquarters at Benfield road, Newcastle. [16067]

Mr. Malone: The total area of office accommodation, including circulation area, at the former Yorkshire regional health authority headquarters at Park parade, Harrogate is 6,299 sq m. The total area of office accommodation, including circulation area, at the former Northern regional health authority headquarters at Benfield road, Newcastle is 4,303 sq m.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 919, how many square feet of office accommodation will be built for the Northern and Yorkshire regional office of the NHS executive as a result of the initial contract; what additional works have been specified since the initial contract was signed with the developer; how much the additional works will cost; and how many additional square feet of offices the additional works will provide. [16149]

Mr. Malone: The internal floor area of the Northern and Yorkshire regional office will be 2,160 sq m. No additional works have been specified since the contract was signed; therefore, no additional cost will be incurred and no additional space will be provided.

Yorkshire Cancer Organisation

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance and at which locations the NHS executive is providing in respect of accommodation for the Yorkshire Cancer Organisation. [16068]

Mr. Horam: The Yorkshire Cancer Organisation is presently funded by Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. For 1996–97, it will be funded jointly by the health authorities in that region. The organisation is located in Leeds.

Community Health Services, Trent

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the amount of funding that Trent region received for funding community health services in each of the last three years; how much it will receive this year; and what proportion of this will be allocated to Sheffield health authority. [16046]

Mr. Horam: Revenue allocations are made to health authorities for hospital and community health services as a whole. There is no separate allocation of funds for community health services.

Wheelchair Voucher Scheme

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be able to announce a decision on the proposal to introduce a wheelchair voucher scheme for people using the NHS wheelchair service. [17297]

Mr. Bowis: I have considered carefully the findings of the departmental working group set up to look at the feasibility of introducing such a scheme, and I will be making a full announcement about this tomorrow at 11 am. Copies of the relevant papers will be available in the Vote Office and in the Library.

Colney Hospital, Norfolk

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums have been made available to the Norfolk and Norwich Health Care NHS trust for expenditure on traffic and transport consultants in connection with a new hospital at Colney in South Norfolk district; and what representations he has received on the compliance of the proposals with planning policy guidance 13. [15960]

Mr. Horam: This is a local matter. The provision of local services is a matter for local managers. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Stuart Burgess, chairman of Anglia and Oxford regional health authority, for details.

Planning permission for any hospital development has to be obtained from the local planning authority, which must take account of the contents of planning policy guidance notes. The planning application is a matter between the local planning authority and the trust.

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS staff are employed by the Norfolk and Norwich Health Care NHS trust at (a) the Norfolk and Norwich hospital and (b) West Norwich hospital; and what estimate he has made of the number of staff to be employed at Colney hospital after the closure of the Norfolk and Norwich and West Norwich hospitals. [15691]

Mr. Horam: Information on staffing levels at individual hospitals is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Malcolm Falcon CBE, chairman of Norfolk and Norwich Health Care national health service trust, for details.

Norfolk and Norwich Health Care NHS trust submitted its formal business case for building a new hospital at the end of January. Given the size of the proposed project, the business case will be considered by officials at both the NHS executive and HM Treasury before it is passed to Ministers for final approval. I cannot comment further until all aspects of the business case have been fully considered.

Yorkshire Hospitals (Waste)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the total amount in weight of toxic waste produced annually by hospitals in Yorkshire; [15781]

(2) what is the total amount in weight of inert or inactive waste produced annually by hospitals in Yorkshire. [15783]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To asks the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16528]

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16503]

Mr. Dorrell: At approximately 4.20 pm on Thursday 15 February.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16589]

Mr. Dorrell: After it was delivered to my office at approximately 4.20 pm on Thursday 15 February.

Whipp's Cross Hospital

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what investigations he has carried out into the procurement process relating to imaging equipment for the day unit of Whipp's Cross hospital; and to what extent the process was in line with the Public Supply Contract Regulations 1995. [16714]

Mr. Horam: The procurement of imaging equipment is a matter for Forest Healthcare national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Lord Jenkin of Roding, chairman of the trust, for details.

Out-of-hours Treatment

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department gives financial assistance to schemes for out-of-hours service in general practice under which all or most patients are required to attend at a centre for treatment; in what circumstances he (a) sets and (b) advises health authorities to set conditions under which a patient is entitled to expect a home visit for out-of-hours treatment; and if he will make a statement. [16424]

Mr. Malone: All general practitioners may apply for reimbursements, from family health services authority out-of- hours development funds, of expenses incurred in providing out-of-hours services which maintain or improve standards of care for patients out of surgery hours and which reduce pressure on individual GPs and/or make more cost-effective use of GP time. This may include reimbursement of the costs incurred in using a primary care centre. The criteria governing the appropriate location of an out-of-hours consultation are set out in the NHS (GMS) Regulations 1992, as amended.

Residential Care

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total in real terms of assets sold by old people to pay for residential care in each of the last five years; and what was in each case the percentage change from the previous year; [16435]

(2) how many people sold their homes to pay for residential care in 1995–96; and what estimate he has made for the number in 1996–97; [16436]

(3) how many people, having sold their assets to pay for residential care, exhausted their funds in the last year for which figures are available; and how many such people remained in the same residential home. [16438]

Mr. Bowis: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) over-65s and (b) over-80s need residential care. [16437]

Mr. Bowis: Information available centrally relates to people receiving residential care in residential care homes. At 31 March 1995, in England, the number of residents in such accommodation aged 65 and over was 220,400, 75 and over 195,700 and 85 and over 118,900 representing 2.9, 5.8, and 13.8 per cent. of the relevant mid-1994 populations respectively.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision exists to assist elderly people who have sold all their assets and subsequently exhaust their funds to remain in the same residential home. [16434]

Mr. Bowis: Since April 1993, local authorities have had a responsibility to arrange accommodation in residential care and nursing homes for elderly people who, for whatever reason, are assessed as needing such care but are unable to meet the cost. Such people have the right to choose which home this care is provided in, subject to availability, cost and appropriateness of the home to the level of care needed.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16478]

Mr. Dorrell: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

British Library

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she intends to publish the reports on the British Library drawn up by (a) Sir Peter Levene, (b) Sir Kenneth Eaton, (c) consultants Kennedy and Donkin and (d) consultants TBV. [16217]

Mr. Sproat: The efficiency unit scrutiny of construction procurement by the Government, which included the British library construction project as one of its case studies, was published on 7 November 1995 and is available for purchase through Her Majesty's Stationery Office bookshops. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State also sought advice from Sir Peter Levene on the progress of the construction project. As a result, Sir Kenneth Eaton was asked by the Department to undertake a short review and reported back in March 1995. My right hon. Friend does not intend to publish the report by Sir Kenneth Eaton and Kennedy and Donkin. Sir Kenneth Eaton provided confidential advice to Ministers and the Kennedy and Donkin report contained commercially sensitive information, some of which could be the subject of future litigation. TBV Consult, formerly the Property Services Agency, is in contract with the Department of National Heritage to provide on-going project management services and, as such has not been commissioned to produce consultant reports.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the British library reading rooms will be provided with open access to the world-wide sourced scientific technological and manufacturing journals, periodicals and books, classified as to subject matter. [16221]

Mr. Sproat: The British library's science reference and information service currently makes available to readers, on open access in its reading rooms, the most recently published material from its collections in these categories, and will continue to do so following the move of the library's science collections to the new building at St. Pancras. Older material can be obtained for readers on request. The open access material is classified according to a scheme developed specifically for scientific and technical literature.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the total expenditure on buildings and fitments since 1972 on the British library's document supply centre. [16069]

Mr. Sproat: Expenditure on accommodation for the document supply centre over the last five years is set out in the table:

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1994–95	1995–96[1]
Rent and rates	119	150	152	145	147
Utilities	219	288	265	275	251
Building maintenance	488	435	558	712	526
Professional and estate fees	205	94	158	227	201
Cleaning	185	197	243	229	198
Total	1,216	1,164	1,376	1,589	1,324

[1] Estimate.

No capital costs have been incurred in relation to document supply centre accommodation during this period. Information in this format in relation to earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many notices of intention to implement redundancy have been serviced by the British library by reading room and location. [16219]

Mr. Sproat: The British library has served no redundancy notices on members of staff. The chief executive has informed library staff of the need to reduce the overall staff number over the next four years, and invited all staff to consider whether they wish to indicate an initial expression of interest in voluntary redundancy.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what monitoring she has carried out in relation to binding costs for books and journals at the British library. [16210]

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend does not routinely monitor the costs to the British library of binding books and journals, but the library reports to her annually on its performance. The most recent such report, for the financial year 1994–95, includes information on the number of volumes bound and on unit binding costs in the form of comparisons of performance during the year with plans before the year began. The library monitors unit costs for binding each month.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the operation of the subject matter classification system used for British library holdings of books and journals and the time span of the systems utilised. [16071]

Mr. Sproat: The British library's science reference and information service provides readers with open access to a significant proportion of the material in its collections. The classification scheme used for open access material was originally introduced in the 1960s, and was developed specifically for scientific and technical literature by the national reference library for science and invention, which then held the science collections which are now part of the British library. The scheme is regularly updated to take account of developments in scientific disciplines. For general reference books which will be held on open access in the library's humanities reading rooms at the new St. Pancras building, the library is proposing to arrange material according to the Dewey decimal classification scheme, with an index based on library of Congress subject headings.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what revenues have been derived from reader-operated photocopier machines in the British library. [16072]

Mr. Sproat: Income to the British library for the last two years from charges for photocopier machines operated by readers is set out in the table:

	1994–95	1995–96[1]
Newspaper library	19	21
Science reference and information service	217	228
Humanities and social sciences	98	93
National sound archive	2	2
Oriental and India Office collections	18	18
British library information science service	2	2
Document supply centre	16	16

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the total number of (a) reader visits to and (b) holdings at the corn merchants store conversion in relation to the British library's document supply centre since 1979. [16070]

Mr. Sproat: Building 23 on the Library's site at Boston Spa in Yorkshire, which was known before conversion as the corn store, is used to store books published before 1980 for the library's document supply centre. The total linear storage capacity of its shelves is 45.75 km, 31.13 km of which is currently taken up by books. Building 23 is not itself designed to accommodate readers, but the annual number of reader visits to the document supply centre's reading room since 1985–86 is set out in the table:

Year	Number of reader visits
1985–86	4,605
1986–87	4,347
1987–88	4,502
1988–89	5,131
1989–90	5,688
1990–91	6,735
1991–92	7,403
1992–93	8,112
1993–94	9,210
1994–95	9,890
1995–96	[1]10,580

Information is not available in this format for earlier years.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what provision has been made for the supply of books and journals from remote locations throughout the world to the British library. [16215]

Mr. Sproat: The British library's document supply centre obtains items on loan from other libraries throughout the world for use in the British library's reading rooms or in other libraries in the United Kingdom. The library currently obtains some 7,000 items annually for readers in the United Kingdom in this way.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when the British library reading rooms supplying information for scientific research, manufacturing industry and technological innovation will be supplied with equipment allowing reader access to the Internet. [16220]

Mr. Sproat: The British library is considering, taking account of considerations such as the additional costs involved, how information on matters such as science, technology and business which is available on the Internet might be made available directly to readers. At present, staff in the library's science reference and information service have access tot he Internet which they may use in providing information to readers.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what reports she has received in relation to public surveys of reader groups and their requirements and the extent to which these factors were taken into account in planning of services at the British library. [16211]

Mr. Sproat: The British library consults extensively with its users through its advisory committees and by means of surveys of users, individual research projects, consultative papers, focus groups, open days and newsletters. The library's code of service sets out the standards which the library's users can expect, and provides them with the opportunity to comment on both the range and the level of the library's services. My right hon. Friend does not routinely receive reports on the results of these activities, but she expects the library to report to her on the range of services which the library provides, on service levels, and on readers' needs, as part of the annual process of planning and review of performance.

British Library and Patent Office

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made as to compliance by the British library with rule 34 of the patent co-operation treaty regulations in terms of open access to documents. [16222]

Mr. Sproat: Rule 34 of the patent co-operation treaty does not impose any obligations on the United Kingdom as to the maintenance of a collection of documents, or as to access to such a collection. The British library does, however, take note of rule 34 and provides access to its collections of patents and journals either by way of immediate open access, or from remote storage on request.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has for the future use of Southampton buildings, Holborn, following vacation by the British library and Patent Office. [16213]

Mr. Sproat: The current occupants of 25 Southampton buildings, Holborn are the British library, the Patent Office and the Office of Fair Trading. The British library's collections housed there will move to the library's new building at St. Pancras following completion of that building. The Government are considering the future of 25 Southampton buildings.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has for the location and provision of an open access library containing world patent and scientific information free at the point of use in respect of the British library. [16214]

Mr. Sproat: The British library's collections of world patents and of scientific literature are at present available for consultation free of charge at the library's reading rooms in Holborn and Aldwych. A large proportion of patents and scientific literature is available on open access. The collections will be moved to the library's new building at St. Pancras once the building has been completed. Following the move, they will be available for consultation at the reading rooms in the new building. The library has no current plans to introduce charges for consultation of material in its reading rooms.

WALES

Late Payments of Debts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact on Welsh firms of late payment by Government Departments. [16186]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1995–96, the Welsh Office paid 95 per cent. of its bills within the normal 30-day period or the contract terms. Except where the invoice is disputed, the remainder will have been paid shortly thereafter.

Minority Languages

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy towards the Council of Europe's charter on minority languages. [15567]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 19 February 1996]: The Government are currently considering whether to sign the charter.

Business Failures

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the last two available years the number of business failures for (a) each principal industrial sector and (b) for Wales as a whole; and if he will make a statement. [15879]

Mr. Hague: Official statistics on business failures are not available separately for Wales.

Company Grants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the practice of relocation by companies in search of grants between areas in Wales and other areas where grants are available. [16223]

Mr. Hague: Regional selective assistance is not normally available for projects which merely involve the transfer of jobs from one area to another.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16174]

Mr. Hague: (a) The Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales, the Countryside Council for Wales, the Cardiff Bay development corporation, the Development Board for Rural Wales, the Further and Higher Education Funding Council, Housing for Wales, the Land Authority for Wales, the Residuary Body for Wales, the Welsh Development Agency, the Welsh Language Board, the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, the Wales tourist board and the agricultural wages committees are all established by statute. Other bodies are established under royal warrant or royal charter.

(b) Only the Residuary Body for Wales, as a levying body, is bound by a statutory requirement, under the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960, to open its board meetings to the public. The public are allowed access to board meetings of CBDC, LAW and WNB but are asked to leave if confidential matters are to be discussed.

(c) No NDPB is statutorily required to hold open meetings for the public; CCW, the national library of Wales and the national museum of Wales—NMW—hold such meetings voluntarily.

Tandem plc

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all grants made by development agencies and other Government-funded bodies in Wales to Tandem plc and its subsidiaries including British Eagle Cycles of Newtown; and if he will make a statement. [16206]

Mr. Hague: No grants have been paid to Tandem plc or its subsidiaries, other than the grant paid to British Eagle Cycles by the Development Board for Rural Wales, to which I referred in my answer to the hon. and learned Member on 16 February, column 732.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16473]

Mr. Hague: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16538]

Mr. Hague: No one.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16580]

Mr. Hague: Approximately 16.15 on Thursday 15 February 1996.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16495]

Mr. Hague: Approximately 16.15 on Thursday 15 February 1996.

Ambulance Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued to the chairmen of the Welsh ambulance trusts in relation to the payment of the bonuses for senior executives of trusts related to financial performance; and if he will make a statement. [16426]

Mr. Hague: I have published a code of conduct and accountability which makes it clear to trust boards that they are responsible for ensuring that total remuneration, which includes bonuses, to senior staff can be justified as reasonable. I have placed a copy of the code of conduct and accountability in the Library of the House.

South-East Wales Ambulance Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with (a) the outgoing chairman and (b) the incoming chairman of the South-East Wales ambulance trust concerning the payment of bonuses to the chief executive, finance director and operations director for the year 1994–95 for achieving financial break-even. [16423]

Mr. Hague: I have had no such consultations. The payment of bonuses is a matter for the trust.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultation he had with the out-going chairman of the South East Wales ambulance trust concerning the impact of his agreement on deferral of the dividend payment on the trust's capital on the calculation of the financial break-even point for the trust. [16420]

Mr. Hague: None. My officials have maintained close contact with the trust since its financial problems became apparent. Appropriate decisions to defer dividend payments were taken to safeguard patient services and the long-term viability of the trust.

Mr. Glyn Davies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the payments of (a) salary, (b) expenses and (c) other emoluments to Mr. Glyn Davies in respect of membership of (i) the Development Board for Rural Wales and (ii) other public appointments between 1985 and 1995. [15221]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 15 February 1996]: Mr. Glyn Davies was appointed as a board member of the Development Board for Rural Wales on 8 July 1986. He was subsequently appointed chairman of the DBRW on 1 April 1989 and at the same time was appointed as a board member of the Wales tourist board and an ex officio board member of the Welsh Development Agency. Mr. Davies resigned from all three appointments on 12 May 1994. Payments made to Mr. Davies in respect of these appointments are listed in the following table:

Payments made to Mr. Glyn Davies

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Rwanda and Burundi

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to increase assistance to (a) Rwanda and (b) Burundi. [9180]

Mr. Hanley [pursuant to his reply 15 January 1996, c. 364]: The reply should have read:

"Since October 1993, Britain has committed £53 million in bilateral emergency and rehabilitation assistance to Rwanda, including Rwandan refugees in neighbouring countries. Total assistance provided over the same period including the UK share of assistance provided by the European Community is £95 million."

Health Programmes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government have taken since the international conference on population and development held in Cairo in 1994 to implement the agreements reached, with special reference to the allocation of more resources for reproductive health programmes. [16204]

Mr. Hanley: The Government continue to encourage a more effective international response to agreements reached in Cairo, especially from multilateral agencies. A total of £184 million of United Kingdom aid was committed for reproductive health in the two years 1994 and 1995. Of this total, £139 million will be passed through the bilateral programmes, including non-governmental organisations, and the balance through international agencies. To improve further the effectiveness of the UK's response to the Cairo conference, we have intensified technology development and research work and initiated a seedcorn fund to test innovative approaches for improving reproductive health.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in which ways the Government's policy has changed in respect of overseas reproductive and sexual health programmes since the agreements reached at the Cairo conference in 1994. [16205]

Mr. Hanley: The Government's policy in this area supports the programme of action agreed in Cairo in 1994, and has not altered since then. The approaches used to implement the policy are under continuous review to ensure that UK aid is as effective as possible in enabling more people to access reproductive health information and services.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of aid is currently given to develop reproductive and sexual health projects in overseas countries. [16203]

Mr. Hanley: In 1994, 2.3 per cent. of the aid for which a breakdown is available was invested in population and reproductive health activities. The figure for 1995 is not yet available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16573]

The Attorney-General: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in my Departments in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. No records are kept of the proportion of time spent by persons in my Departments in considering the Government's response to the Scott inquiry in the course of their duties. It is not therefore possible to estimate the costs incurred.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General what communication he received from the secretary of the Scott inquiry, concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16631]

The Attorney-General: I have had no such communications from Mr. Muttukumaru.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he will take as a result of the finding of the Scott inquiry that his advice to Ministers about signing public interest immunity certificates was based on a fundamental misconception of the principles of PII law. [16648]

The Attorney-General: The advice I gave on PII at the time of the Matrix Churchill trial was entirely in accordance with the law as it then stood. It was based on careful, detailed advice from a team of distinguished independent practitioners, was fully supported by the case law, and has been publicly endorsed by three of the defence counsel and a number of other eminent commentators.

Since the Matrix Churchill trial the decision of the House of Lords in Ex parte Wiley (1994) has brought about a change in the law on PII. The Government will consider carefully the recommendations on the subject made in the Scott report.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16530]

The Attorney-General: A very small number of civil servants in my Departments had access to the report prior to publication for the purpose of preparing the Government's response. Such access was in accordance with the conditions laid down by the Scott inquiry.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16548]

The Attorney-General: I and my officials have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Attorney-General how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16559]

The Attorney-General: I refer to the answer given by the Prime Minister today.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16501]

The Attorney-General: During the afternoon of Wednesday, 7 February 1996.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Attorney-General when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16587]

The Attorney-General: Wednesday, 7 February 1996.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16569]

The Attorney-General: I do not envisage making such changes. Where officials criticised in the Scott report had acted conscientiously, in good faith and in accordance with Government policy, it would not normally be appropriate to take disciplinary action against them. If there are cases where disciplinary action is considered appropriate this would be carried out under normal departmental disciplinary procedure.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the criminal trials since 1966 at which Governments have invoked public interest immunity certificates on the basis of (a) class claim and (b) contents claim; and on what external legal advice he instructed Ministers that they must sign the PII certificates in the case of (i) Matrix Churchill and (ii) Ordtec. [16428]

The Attorney-General: No central record is held of public interest immunity certificates signed by Ministers. I list below the criminal cases in which PII certificates are known to have been used, on the basis of information provided by the prosecuting authorities for which I am responsible—the Crown Prosecution Service, the Serious Fraud Office and the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland. In each case an indication is given of whether the claim was made on the basis of contents, class or both. The information has been obtained from those officials likely to have the relevant knowledge, and is not necessary exhaustive.

Another case (Both)

The advice which I gave on PII in the Matrix Churchill trial was based on a joint opinion, dated 10 January 1992, from Mr. John Laws, then first junior Treasury counsel, common law, and now a judge of the High Court, Mr. Michael Kalisher QC, chairman of the Criminal Bar Association 1991–93, and Mr. Nicholas Ainley.

The PII claims upheld by the Court of Appeal in Ordtec were made on the basis of a further joint opinion obtained from Mr. Stephen Richards and Mr. William Charles, first junior Treasury counsel, common law and chancery, dated 9 October 1995, following the decision of the House of Lords in Ex parte Wiley (1994). Copies of both these opinions are in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he proposes to take in respect of the fact that he does not accept that he was not personally at fault and that the issues that had been raised by Mr. Heseltine's stand on PII certificates did not fall into the category of mundane, routine, run of the mill issues that could probably be left to be dealt with by officials. [16647]

The Attorney-General: Sir Richard Scott's criticism of my role results from the fact that he takes a fundamentally different view of the law on public interest immunity. My advice to my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister was given with great care and was fully in accordance with the law as it then stood. It involved the preparation of a specially drafted PII certificate which explained my right hon. Friend's role. The judge saw every document covered by the certificate and duly decided which should be disclosed, exactly as my right hon. Friend had been led to expect. The procedure was entirely fair.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Attorney-General which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16476]

The Attorney-General: If any Minister did so, that is a matter for them.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Rents, Gloucestershire

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each local authority in Gloucestershire the range of local reference rents by property type determined by the rent officer service from 2 January to 2 February. [16143]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not yet available. Data on rents determined by rent officers since 2 January, including local reference rents, will be published in the Department's regular publication, "Rent Officer Statistics", which is available on a quarterly basis. I will arrange for the next edition of the bulletin, covering the first quarter of 1996, to be sent to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 738, how the totals for reduced benefit directions imposed by each Child Support Agency centre in respect of, (a) good cause accepted, (b) absent parent named and (c) good cause not accepted were arrived at for both the Belfast and Plymouth centres; and what procedures are adopted by his Department in the checking of statistics provided to the hon. Members in written parliamentary questions. [15122]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Child Support Agency, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 22 February 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about reduced benefit directions within the Child Support Agency.

Having looked again at this set of tables, I can see that for the second time they include an error. Although the monthly entries in the columns you have mentioned are accurate, a mistake has occurred in the totalling of these entries. I am extremely sorry that this error passed unnoticed by me and my colleagues who had prepared the tables: the responsibility for it is mine.

The Agency always aims to provide prompt and accurate responses to written parliamentary questions, and I cannot recall making one such error before, let alone two on the same set of figures. The procedures for checking statistical information supplied in written answers have been reviewed and made more stringent. This will guard against a similar error being made in future.

I have enclosed a version of the full tables supplied by way of answer to your Parliamentary Question set out in Official Report, column 738. You will note that the relevant columns do now show their correct totals.

Once again, please accept my apologies for the trouble you have had obtaining this information.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what targets are set by the Child Support Agency for time taken to reply to correspondence; and what progress has been made in attaining target levels. [15747]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated February 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about targets set by the Child Support Agency for the time taken to reply to correspondence.

The only firm target the Agency has for correspondence is the Departmental target of replying to MPs' letters within 20 working days. The table below shows the performance against this target, highlighting the improvements achieved in this area.

Chief Executive replies to MPs' letters

Percentage

	1–20 days	21–40 days	Over 40 days
September 1994	14	55	31
May 1995	56	44	0
December 1995	60	40	0

The Agency currently has a charter standard to reply to written enquiries from the public "within 10 working days". This is being revised. During 1994/95, the Agency replied to 35% of written enquiries within the charter standard. In 1995/96, the figure to the end of December was almost 40%.

I hope this is helpful.

Disability

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the percentage of claimants of (a) severe disablement allowance, and (b) incapacity benefit currently undertaking limited paid work on the grounds that the work is (i) voluntary and (ii) therapeutic. [16083]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total contribution for each London borough paid from local authority sources in each of the past five years. [15946]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information requested is insufficient for the purposes of providing an answer.

Departmental officials have tried unsuccessfully on four occasions to contact the hon. Member on my behalf in order to obtain clarification.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the rates of employer national insurance contributions since 1979, the amount of revenue raised by these contributions in each year and the total of the increase in revenue resulting from changes in the employer rate. [15771]

Mr. Heald: The available information is in the table:

4.1 per cent. 1983–84 to 1987–88

3.8 per cent. 1988–89 to 1992–93

3.0 per cent. 1993–94 to 1995–96

[2] Includes the national insurance surcharge which was abolished October 1984.

[3] The upper earnings limit for employers' contributions was abolished and reduced rates for employers of the lower paid were introduced from October 1985.

[4] Figures have been subject to rounding.

[5] Estimate taken from the Government Actuary's report on the Benefits up-rating and Contributions re-rating Orders, published February 1996, Cm 3149.

[6] If the employers' contribution structure, rates and level of contracted-out rebates in force in 1979–80 and applied in 1995–96, employers would have paid about £5.6 billion more in national insurance contributions for that year.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance has been issued to agents of his Department when assessing benefit claims for (a) myalgic encephalomyelitis and (b) fibromyalgia sufferers. [15748]

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 21 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what guidance has been issued to agents of his Department when assessing benefit claims for (a) Myalgic Encephalomyelitis (ME) and (b) fibromyalgia sufferers.

The Benefits Agency (BA) employs doctors through the BA Medical Services, who are trained in all physical, sensory and mental conditions including ME and fibromyalgia. Entitlement to benefit is decided by independent adjudication officers, who can seek the opinion of these doctors.

Various publications containing procedural guidance on the processing of claims are available to BA staff. These include Background Information on Incapacity for Work and the Disability Handbook which provide information on specific disabilities including ME and fibromyalgia, additionally they advise staff when to seek guidance from BAMS. The Disability Handbook is currently being redrafted following discussions with the ME Association. The Short Term Benefits Guide also provides procedural guidance regarding ME and fibromyalgia for BA staff.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many of those failing to attend the medical examination for incapacity benefit applied on the basis of mental health problems; and what percentage of the total this represents; [15867]

(2) how many of those failing to return the incapacity benefit questionnaire are applying on the basis of mental health problems; and what percentage of the total this represents. [15866]

(3) how many of those appealing against the result of the all-work test for incapacity benefit applied for the benefit on the basis of mental health problems; and what percentage of the total this represents. [15865]

Mr. Burt: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Long-term Sick and Disabled People

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Rooney) on 12 February 1996, Official Report, column 476, if he will represent the data in real terms, and to what extent the increase in the number of long-term sick and disabled is due to (a) the number of claimants to existing schemes, (b) new claimants to new benefits and (c) an increase in the real value of benefits. [15828]

Mr. Burt: The information is set out in the table.

£ million

Year	1978–79	1985–86	1989–90	1994–95
Long-term sick and disabled[1]	1,770	5,220	8,420	19,600
Long-term sick and disabled[2]	5,162	8,095	10,544	19,600

[2] Figures are in real-terms (1994–95 prices).

An explanation of increases in expenditure is not available in the format requested. The increases are due to increasing caseloads and average amounts. Individuals may also be entitled to receive more than one benefit from within this group.

In 1992 disability living allowance and disability working allowance were introduced, which added £3,129 million to expenditure in 1994–95. The increase in the real value of benefits from 1978–79 to 1994–95 accounts for a further £3,392 million.

Fraud, Northumberland

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) on 12 February 1996, Official Report, column 471, if he will give (a) equivalent figures for Newcastle upon Tyne and (b) the sums of benefit subject to recovery. [16150]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table. Figures for organised fraud investigations are not available locally.

	Number of cases where fraud established	Benefit savings	Prosecutions	Overpayments
1994–95	2,345	£4,324,451	149	£58,309
1995–31 January 1996	1,518	£4,402,524	104	£124,201

Bronchitis and Emphysema Report

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he received the report from the industrial injuries advisory Council on chronic bronchitis and emphysema; if he will place a copy in the Library; when he expects to respond to the advisory Council's report; and if he will make a statement. [15749]

Mr. Roger Evans: The report has not yet been received. I understand that the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council expects to submit it within the next few weeks. A copy will be placed in the Library when the report is published, normally within three months of receipt.

The Government will consider carefully any recommendations the council may make.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been (a) the total level of housing benefit paid out and (b) the number of recipients in each London borough for each of the past five years. [15931]

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the tables:

No figures are available for the proportion of Housing Benefit administration costs met by Central Government. This is because half of the subsidy is distributed by the Department for the Environment, via the Revenue Support Grant. This does not specify the exact amount attributable to Housing Benefit.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16178]

Mr. Heald: The Occupational Pensions Board is the only executive non-departmental public body sponsored by this Department. Its statutory base is in the Pensions Schemes Act 1993. There is no statutory requirement to admit members of the public to board or committee meetings, nor is it the practice to do so. There is a statutory requirement, under the provisions of the Occupational Pensions Board (Determinations and Review Procedure) Regulations 1973 to hold public hearings, in connection with reviews of the board's determinations, unless the board for any special reasons directs otherwise. If such a hearing is held privately, a member of the Council on Tribunals is entitled to attend.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16534]

Mr. Lilley: No members of this Department saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was published.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16583]

Mr. Lilley: At 3.30 pm on 15 February.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16497]

Mr. Lilley: Copies of the report of the Scott inquiry were delivered to my office shortly before noon on 15 February. The copies were in sealed packages which were not opened until 3.30 pm.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16474]

Mr. Lilley: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16537]

Mr. Newton: None.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16561]

Mr. Hain: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16599]

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16571]

Mr. Newton: I refer to the answer given by the Prime Minister today.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 26 February 1996

DEFENCE

British Military Forces (Control)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests he has received for British military forces to come under local, non-British control; what has been his response; and if he will make a statement. [13266]

Mr. Soames: British military forces regularly come under non-British operational control when they take part in operations under UN, NATO or ad hoc coalition auspices. In all cases, British forces remain under UK national command.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report, "Iraq's Growing Arsenal: Programs and Facilities," prepared by the Central Intelligence Agency in July 1990. [16004]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have no responsibility for reports prepared by a foreign intelligence agency. Matters relating to Iraq's procurement programme are dealt with in the Scott report.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base and which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16030]

Mr. Arbuthnot: None of my Department's executive non-departmental bodies has a statutory requirement to admit members of the public to board or committee meetings, or to hold open meetings.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16017]

Mr. Arbuthnot: While none of my Department's executive non-departmental bodies is subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner or (b) the Audit Commission, they are all subject to (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) the code of practice on access to Government information, (e) performance indicators and (f) citizens charter provisions.

Al Yamamah Project Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's staff formerly involved in the Al Yamamah project office have made applications under the business appointment rules. [16190]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Royal Yacht

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efforts have been made to raise private sector finance to construct a new royal yacht. [16259]

Mr. Soames: No decision has been made on whether to replace Britannia and the Government have not invited contributions from the private sector to the costs of any replacement. A number of suggestions for a possible replacement have, however, been received from outside the Government, and some of these include private sector funding. The Government are continuing to consider the question of a replacement. An announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efforts have been made to raise funds from the private sector towards the financing of HMY Britannia; and if he will make a statement. [16258]

Mr. Soames: Private sector funding has not been sought for the operation of HMY Britannia. However, organisers of trade promotion events held on board the yacht meet all additional costs incurred, over and above normal running costs.

Air Vice-Marshal Howard

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations led him to approve Air Vice-Marshal Howard's appointment as a consultant to Tripod Engineering Ltd. in November 1988 following his retirement in October 1988; and to what extent these considerations were based on (a) written policy guidelines and (b) assessment of the particular case. [16304]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As Sir Richard Scott's report makes clear, Air Vice-Marshal Howard did not seek permission before taking up his appointment with Tripod Engineering Ltd.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the present whereabouts and ownership of International Military Services Ltd. files relating to defence consultancies and contracts in Jordan, Iran and Iraq after 1981. [16313]

Mr. Arbuthnot: These are matters for the company.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance was provided by (a) serving and (b) recently discharged British officers to International Military Services Ltd. to provide advice to the Government of Iraq between July 1981 and August 1990. [16305]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Advice given by any IMS representatives is a matter for the company. I am not aware of any serving officers being involved in any such matters.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date a final settlement of outstanding contractual issues with Iran in respect of contracts involving International Military Services Ltd. was concluded. [16309]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for International Military Services Ltd., but I understand that not all of the company's outstanding contractual issues have been concluded.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department (a) was informed of and (b) approved the instruction of the chief executive of International Military Services Ltd. to remove material relating to Iraq from the company's files. [16394]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No. The maintenance of records is a matter for the company.

Integrated Weapon Complex (Basra)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions the integrated weapon complex constructed in Basra, Iraq, in 1985, was subjected to allied attack in Operation Desert Storm; and what assessment his Department made of the damage caused to it. [16399]

Mr. Soames: Full details of coalition operational combat sorties are not held by the MOD, but we have no record of any RAF attacks on such a facility. Battle damage assessment reports from recent conflicts remain classified.

Canira Technical Company Ltd.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the ownership and trading activities of the Canira Technical Company Ltd. of Northern Ireland with particular reference to its involvement with the Iraqi arms procurement programme. [16325]

Mr. Arbuthnot: There is nothing that I can usefully add to the information contained in paragraph D5.25 (xvi) of the Scott report.

Iranian Naval Base (Bander-Abbus)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving British officers (a) on secondment and (b) temporarily discharged were made available for the repair of an Iranian naval base at Bander-Abbas in the period between July 1981 and August 1988 as a contribution to a contract held by IMS. [16401]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am aware of none.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16877]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Regulations require staff to declare to their line manager all investments in any company with which they have official dealings. These declarations should include details of such investments held by an individual's immediate family, as far as he or she is aware of those interests. Staff who are themselves directors, or partners or who hold any other appointment in a private sector commercial organisation must, if the private interest is associated in any way with their official duties, declare the interest to their line manager. Any information declared is confidential to the declarant and his or her line manager. No central records are kept, nor is it considered necessary to collect such information centrally.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS, indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17451]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The central data maintained by the Ministry of Defence procurement executive shows that there are more than 150 contracts currently open with the company with a total value of in excess of £50 million. To obtain the level of detailed information requested for each contract would require considerable further research which could not be undertaken without disproportionate cost.

Married Quarters Estate

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he is making with his proposals to transfer the married quarters estate in England and Wales to the private sector. [17719]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The preliminary information memorandum, published on 30 November 1995, has attracted strong interest from a substantial number of companies and consortia. A full information memorandum has now been issued to prequalified bidders, on a commercially confidential basis, to enable them to submit bids for the estate.

Nigeria (Arms Sales)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his policy on arms sales to Nigeria. [16967]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 12 February, Official Report, column 447.

Services Sound and Vision Corporation (Cyprus)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 358, from what sources it is proposed to raise the estimated cost of encrypting and providing decoding equipment for the SSVC television service in Cyprus; and what are the estimated numbers of expatriates in Cyprus who will not be entitled to a decoding device. [15905]

Mr. Soames: If it is decided to provide an encrypted SSVC television service in Cyprus and to supply the necessary decoders to the entitled audience, the costs will be met from the Defence budget.

I am unable to give an estimate of the number of expatriates in Cyprus who view SSVC television and would not be entitled to receive a decoding device if the television service were encrypted.

Abbey Wood Building

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 722, regarding the position of sub-contractors working on the new MOD building at Abbey Wood, Bristol, if he will make a statement on the disputes between the main construction contractor and his sub-contractors. [16961]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Commercial relationships between the main construction contractor and his sub-contractors are matters for the main contractor to deal with. However, the Department understands the normal process of settling final accounts for the sub-contractors who have completed their works continues.

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 722, regarding the costs of the new MOD building at Abbey Wood, Bristol, what are the estimated and budgeted costs for (a) site acquisition, (b) construction, (c) fitting out, (d) professional works management fees and (e) VAT; and if the estimated cost of construction takes account of disputed payments to the contractor. [16974]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The estimated and budgeted costs for the Abbey Wood construction project, at 1992 prices and inclusive of VAT where appropriate, are as follows:

	£ million
Site acquisition and planning obligations	[1]24.9
Construction, including fitting out	[2]212.6
Works project management fees	[3]9.7

[1] £27.3 million at 1995 prices.
[2] £235.5 million at 1995 prices.
[3] £10.5 million at 1995 prices.

Elements of the fit-out works are currently subject to procurement competitions and therefore the associated costs are commercially confidential. These figures reflect the Department's estimate of the likely outturn costs for the project.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph C 2.62 of the Scott report, if he will list the equipment that was sent to Iraq under temporary licences and subsequently incorporated into the Iraqi weapon producing system between 1980 and 1991. [17342]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am not in a position to state with certainty what equipment was incorporated into Iraqi weapons manufacture. Sir Richard Scott addresses these issues in detail in sections D2.46 to D2.51, D6.55 to D6.72 and D6.194 to D6.220 of his report and I have nothing to add to his description of what equipment was sent to Iraq under temporary licences.

United Nations Arms Register

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to reply to parliamentary questions concerning sales of defence equipment and arms covered by the 1991 United Nations arms register. [17124]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We intend to review the practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of the export of defence related equipment in reply to parliamentary questions.

A paper is today being placed in the Library of the House which sets out current policy and practice in informing Parliament about arms sales matters. We hope that this will be a useful document to take the discussion forward. Copies of the UK returns to the UN arms register covering the export of seven categories of conventional arms have been placed in the House Libraries, on an annual basis, since the system began in 1992.

Export Licences

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his policy to permit the disclosure of information contained in section C6 of the export licence application form where the prospective export is deemed to be a dual-use militarily sensitive technology. [15969]

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made on Thursday 15 February, Official Report, columns 1139–44, in relation to Sir Richard Scott's recommendations on this matter.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Pensions and Stipends

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what powers the Synod has to instruct the commissioners to (a) reduce the level of pensions already in payment and (b) reduce the level of stipends in payment. [15546]

Mr. Alison: The General Synod has no power to instruct the commissioners to reduce the level of pensions in payment. The levels are determined in accordance with the pensions regulations. Under the current arrangements, the legislation gives to the commissioners the power to increase the figures, which they customarily exercise in line with the Church's pensions policy. There is no provision for any reduction to be made in the monetary amounts payable.

Stipend levels are determined on a diocesan basis by the bishop with the concurrence of the Diocesan Board of Finance in accordance with section 5 of the Diocesan Stipends Funds Measure 1953, having regard to the advice of the commissioners as central stipends authority. The commissioners were appointed as central stipends authority by a General Synod Regulation in 1972, which was revised in 1982. The Synod has the power to amend this regulation if it so wishes by appointing another authority, but cannot directly reduce the level of stipends.

The Synod also has the power to amend the above legislation, subject to the agreement of Parliament.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid (Maxwell Case)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much has been paid by the legal aid fund on account in respect of defendants of the Maxwell case. [15959]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To date, £8.3 million has been paid on account from the legal aid fund to lawyers representing Kevin and Ian Maxwell—Trachtenberg, Bunn, Fuller, and Stoney. That sum includes £829,000 paid in respect of the magistrates court proceedings.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to reduce the number and length of statutory instruments. [15764]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In respect of the areas of law for which he is responsible, the Lord Chancellor endeavours to combine and streamline regulations wherever possible and to ensure that they are as concise as is consistent with clarity and legal certainty.

Children Act

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what efforts are being made to monitor the operation of section 8 orders under the Children Act 1989. [15948]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have been asked to reply. The Lord Chancellor's Department is undertaking a review of the operation of the Children Act, with a particular emphasis on minimising delay. The Children Act advisory committee is also monitoring the implementation of the Act and a number of research projects are being undertaken.

The Department collects statistics on the number of applications for section 8 orders received, orders made, orders refused, orders of no order made and applications withdrawn.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performed indicators and (f) provisions under the citizen's charter. [16010]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies—the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992, when the Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone the implementation of the authorised practitioners scheme.

The Legal Aid Board is not subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission but (a) and (c) to (f) all apply to the board.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base and which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public; and whether in each case is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16028]

Mr. Evans: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies—the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. Both have a statutory basis. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992, when the Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the authorised practitioners scheme.

The Legal Aid Board does not, nor is it required to, admit members of the public to board or committee meetings or hold open meetings for members of the public.

Mental Incapacity

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he expects to publish the Government's consultation paper on mental incapacity, following the Law Commission's report on the subject; how long the consultation period will be; and when he expects the results will be published. [16151]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No date has yet been set for publication of the Government's consultation paper on mental incapacity. The length of the consultation period has yet to be decided.

PRIME MINISTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the consistency between his statement in The Sun on 17 February as to United Kingdom arms exports to Iraq with the details of export licences provided on pages 21, 33, 34 and 77 of the appendix A of volume V of the Scott report. [16907]

The Prime Minister: Appendix A of volume V of the Scott report confirms that the UK did not on any occasion approve the export of lethal defence equipment to Iraq. This is the point that I was making in my article in The Sun on 17 February.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what guidelines he has issued to Departments in respect of the retention of papers dealing with export licences since the Scott inquiry commenced. [15979]

The Prime Minister: No specific guidance has been issued on the retention of papers dealing with export licences. Central guidance on the retention of Government papers generally is issued by the Public Records Office. More detailed criteria are applied by each Government Department to meet its own needs.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the briefing note prepared for him in support of his oral answer to the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) of 12 November 1992, Official Report, column 990. [15629]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 16 February 1996]: This document was submitted as evidence to Sir Richard Scott's inquiry. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document which he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible. Documents which Sir Richard does not consider relevant to his report and which contain internal discussion and advice will not be made available.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now place in the Library a copy of the chronology of United Kingdom trade with Iraq, prepared for his Office by the Cabinet Office in November 1992. [16050]

The Prime Minister: This document was submitted as evidence to Sir Richard Scott's inquiry. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document which he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Ministers' (Resignations)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Prime Minister how many Ministers have resigned in each year since 1979. [16985]

The Prime Minister: This is a matter of public record.

Ministers (Broadcasting)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make arrangements for the transcripts of all television and radio broadcasts made by Ministers of the Crown to be deposited in the Library. [16729]

The Prime Minister: This is a matter for departmental Ministers. The cost of making it a universal practice would be very substantial.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Deregulation

11. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to measure the impact of the deregulation process. [15247]

Mr. Willetts: Savings to business arising from recent deregulatory measures include £41 million a year from simplification of food temperature controls and £18 million a year by removing unnecessary gold plating from the collective redundancies directive. New guidelines on compliance cost assessment require departments to assess the impact of all regulatory proposals likely to impact on business and to place copies in the House Libraries.

26. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the United Kingdom representative office in Brussels with regard to deregulation in the United Kingdom and the EC. [15623]

Mr. Freeman: I last discussed deregulation with the UK permanent representation to the European Union on 23 November last year. The United Kingdom representation in Brussels is fully aware of the Government's deregulatory objectives and takes every opportunity to advance the case for deregulation in its work with the Commission and other member states.

Departmental Priorities

12. Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to re-assess the priorities of his Department. [15248]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have no such plans.

Regulations (Cost-benefit Analyses)

13. Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in preparing the cost benefit analyses of regulations. [15249]

Mr. Freeman: New guidance on measuring the costs to business of regulatory proposals was issued to departments on 25 January. Guidance on measuring the benefits of regulatory proposals is currently being prepared and we hope to publish this by April. Copies of our compliance cost assessment guidance has been circulated to Ministers in other European Union nations.

Scott Inquiry

14. Dr. Godman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent representations he has received concerning the presentation of Government policy relating to the Scott inquiry. [15250]

Mr. Willetts: We have received a small number of representations concerning the Scott inquiry.

16. Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the presentation of Government policy relating to the Scott inquiry. [15252]

18. Ms Eagle: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Scott inquiry. [15254]

Mr. Freeman: The Scott report will be debated later today.

24. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received concerning open government and the export of defence-related equipment to Iraq. [15261]

The Deputy Prime Minister: None.

23. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with the Prime Minister about the implications of the Scott report for the civil service. [15260]

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has discussed a number of the conclusions and recommendations of the Scott report with the Prime Minister. Many of these have implications for the civil service.

27. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Scott report and the workings of his Department. [15264]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Scott report will be debated later today.

Government Policies (Presentation)

15. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the Government's key policy priorities for presentation to the public throughout 1996. [15251]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Government will continue to stress that their policies are designed to: pursue economic prosperity and security for all, based on an enterprise economy; create a nation of opportunity, reflecting the Government's values of choice, ownership and reward; uphold decent common-sense values in the pursuit of law, order and justice; provide the people of Britain with first-class public services; and reflect pride in the nation and its place in the world.

Ministerial Responsibility

17. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what responsibility he takes for circulating information on the exercise of ministerial responsibility. [15253]

The Deputy Prime Minister: This information is contained in the "List of Ministerial Responsibilities", which is published and circulated by my Department.

Civil Service (Morale)

19. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his proposals to improve the morale of the civil service. [15255]

Mr. Willetts: Morale in the civil service is best maintained by allowing staff to perform to the best of their abilities in the career they have chosen. As the Deputy Prime Minister made clear in his recent speech on the civil service, the Government's civil service reforms enable staff to focus their attention on delivering high-quality public services. This is the best way of satisfying both them and the users of their services.

Forms and Surveys

22. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to reduce the number of forms and survey which businesses are required to complete and return to Government Departments and agencies. [15259]

Mr. Freeman: Departments have been asked to report annually on the burden that they impose on business through forms and surveys by setting targets and reporting achievements in meeting them. I have also established a study group to investigate ways of reducing the compliance cost of Government surveys of business. I announced the appointment of the chairman of the study group and its terms of reference in a written reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 9 February 1996 at column 372.

Pay (Ministers and Special Advisers)

25. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what account is taken of special advisers' pay in determining the pay of Ministers. [15262]

Mr. Willetts: None. Ministerial salaries are determined by the Ministerial and Other Salaries Act 1975.

Iraq (Exports)

28. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received concerning the presentation of Government policy regarding the export of machine tools to Iraq. [15265]

The Deputy Prime Minister: None.

Cabinet Policies

29. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which Cabinet policies he has spent most time promoting in 1996. [15266]

The Deputy Prime Minister: My colleagues and I have promoted policies that pursue economic prosperity and security for all, based on an enterprise economy; create a nation of opportunity, reflecting the Government's values of choice, ownership and reward; uphold decent common-sense values in the pursuit of law, order and justice; provide the people of Britain with first-class public services; and reflect pride in the nation and its place in the world.

Departmental Publications

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many copies of the booklets (a) "Getting a good deal in Europe" and (b) "Guidance on preparations of Compliance Cost Assessments" have been printed; and how many of each have been distributed to civil servants. [15882]

Mr. Freeman: The numbers printed and distributed were:

	Number printed	Total distributed to date
Getting a good deal in Europe ...
Deregulatory Principles in Practice	20,000	7,600
Checking the Cost of Regulation: A Guide to Compliance Cost Assessment	15,000	3,200

Information on the numbers distributed to civil servants is not separately available.

EU Legislation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 484, what improvements in the regulatory systems he has pressed for at the EU level; and if he will list the directives he has assessed as burdensome on which hopes to take action. [15906]

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the paper "UK Priorities for European Regulatory Reform", which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Government Car Service

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he plans to study the scope for privatisation of the Government car service. [17521]

Mr. Freeman: No. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment made clear on 8 November when he announced the transfer to my department of the Security Facilities Executive, the agency of which the Government car service forms part, the only study proposed into the scope for more private sector involvement in the work of the agency was in respect of the custody service. I have nothing to add to that statement.

Next Steps Programme

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of the next steps programme. [17520]

Mr. Freeman: The Government today published the sixth Next Steps Review—Cm 3164—which was laid in both Houses. It brings together information on the 109 next steps agencies and the executive organisations of HM Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue established in Government at the end of 1995. Two out of three civil servants work under next steps arrangements.

The review has been developed from being a report on the next steps project to one that focuses on agency performance. It shows that in different areas and in different ways, many next steps agencies are delivering services to improved standards with increased efficiency and effectiveness.

For the first time, as announced in the second competitiveness White Paper "Competitiveness: Forging Ahead", the review includes results for each agency against its key targets over the last three financial years as well as the performance targets set for 1995–96. This indicates trends and facilitates comparison.

The individual commentaries on each agency include new features, such as whether the agency is involved in a private finance initiative project; its progress in securing investors in people accreditation; comment on external responses to completed prior options reviews; and more consistent coverage of market testing initiatives. The competing for quality returns reveal for the first time results for individual agencies. Between April 1992 and March 1995, agencies reviewed £1.3 billion of activities under the competing for quality programme, half of all the activity reviewed in the civil service. Agencies produced annual savings of £313 million, nearly 60 per cent. of the civil service total savings. This represents an average saving of 24 per cent.

Taken together, the individual entries in the review report on more than 1,400 key performance targets. Of these, the overall proportion met by agencies rose to 83 per cent. in 1994–95. This shows a continuing trend of improvement over the three preceding years when the results were 80 per cent. in 1993–94, 77 per cent. in 1992–93 and 76 per cent. in 1991–92.

Within government, agencies continue to be at the forefront of implementing the principles of the citizens charter. Sixty two charter marks are now held by agencies, HM Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue, reflecting the commitment of agency chief executives and their staff to high standards of customer service.

While improvements in performance and standards of service are being achieved, the data contained in the review also show that there is scope to do more. The Government's policy is to seek continuous improvement; and building on the present level of experience of target setting and monitoring, agencies will be required to demonstrate that they are delivering genuinely challenging levels of performance. Ministers will take an even closer interest in ensuring this is so.

The year ahead will see most remaining candidates established as agencies. By 1997, assuming that currently identified functions are all launched as agencies, I expect around three quarters of civil servants will be working under next steps arrangements. That is a significant achievement and a tribute to the way in which staff at all levels have committed themselves to change and to improved performance. The benefits for taxpayers, customers and staff are set out in the review and are clear to see.

Freedom of Information

Ms Coffey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on Government policy in respect of freedom of information. [15257]

Mr. Willetts: Our policy is based on the code of practice on access to Government information, which has been operating since 1994, together with legislation covering specific areas of information that the Government have introduced or supported. We believe that this meets the aims of freedom of information in a way that is less legalistic, less rigid and less costly than a general statutory access regime.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

British Council

37. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the chairman of the British Council to discuss the level of Overseas Development Administration grant in aid to the council. [15274]

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited the British Council on 7 February. Among other subjects, he and the chairman discussed planned funding from both wings of the FCO.

Emergency Disaster Relief

39. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the Government have given recently to emergency disaster relief. [15276]

Mr. Hanley: Since 1 January, the ODA has responded to six new emergencies—in China, Madagascar, Mali, Morocco, Nicaragua and South Africa—with grants totalling £515,000. It has also continued funding actions is more than 20 other long-term situations.

Fundamental Expenditure Review

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect of the recommendation in the Overseas Development Administration's fundamental expenditure review that the technical assistance functions of the United Nations Development Programme, United Nations Children's Fund and the United Nations Population Fund be consolidated. [16397]

Mr. Hanley: The ODA fundamental expenditure review did not make a specific recommendation for the consolidation of the technical assistance functions of UNDP, UNICEF and UNFPA. We nevertheless keep under continuous review measures for improving the efficiency and effectiveness of all UN development agencies.

Montserrat

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial help has been and is now being given to the people of Montserrat in relation to problems associated with increased volcanic activity in the dependency; what assessment he has made of its adequacy; what further help is being considered; and if he will make a statement. [16975]

Mr. Hanley: Through the official aid programme, the Government have committed £4.6 million since July 1995 to problems raised by the volcanic emergency. A list of the main elements of this continuing programme has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Monitoring and assessment of the existing funding is continuous through the governor's office, which is assisted by a full-time ODA consultant on Montserrat and visits from the regional office in Barbados. Further funds are available if necessary.

Mr. Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people have given up their homes in Montserrat and left for Antigua and elsewhere due to increased volcanic activity on the island; what contingency plans have been made for dealing with the worsening of the situation; and if he will make a statement. [16976]

Mr. Hanley: It is estimated that up to 1,000 Montserratians are now off the island. Most are working elsewhere in the Caribbean. There are no figures on the number of households involved. A range of plans for differing situations have been formulated. The lessons learnt from two recent evacuations into the northern safe zone are influencing continuing preparations for any third such event. Thanks to the co-operation of the Government of Antigua, facilities exist on Antigua should evacuation of Montserrat be necessary.

Nigeria (Arms Flights)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many flights of arms and ammunition were made from Manaston airport to Nigeria in the course of the Biafra problems; and what assessment he has made of the delivery of the manifests. [17246]

Mr. Hanley: I regret that to provide the information which relates to the period 1966 to 1970 would incur disproportionate costs.

United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received, and what discussions he has held, about the present funding situation of the UNHCR humanitarian operation in the great lakes region. [17025]

Mr. Hanley: Representations were made by the United High Commissioner for Refugees to the ODA and UK mission officials in Geneva on 4 February and the matter was subsequently discussed by European Union ambassadors in Geneva on 5 February. The release since then of US$ 26 million by the European Commission has now alleviated UNHCR's funding problems.

On 31 January, my noble Friend Baroness Chalker announced a further UK bilateral commitment of £3 million towards the water and sanitation needs of refugees and local population in Tanzania. A large proportion of this will be channelled through UNHCR.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Scott Report

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost to public funds of the printing and publishing of the Scott report. [16218]

Mr. Lang: HMSO normally bears the costs of printing, publishing and distributing all Parliamentary publications, with the overall aim of recovering these from sales revenue.

However, in this case, and at the request of Sir Richard Scott, my Department has agreed to pay a subsidy in the region of £85,000 so that the cover price can be contained at a level which ensures that the report is as accessible as possible to the general public.

Price and Market Agreements (Foods)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received alleging an agreement on price and markets between manufacturers of pickles and other canned food products in the United Kingdom. [16229]

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. Any evidence suggesting that manufacturers of pickles and other canned food products may be acting anti-competitively should be brought to the attention of the Director General of Fair Trading, who has the responsibility to consider and, if appropriate, investigate such allegations.

Wind Turbines

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the comparative efficiency of energy production of wind turbines and conventional forms of energy production. [16418]

Mr. Page: Reviews spanning the technical, economic and environmental status of the range of technologies available or potentially available, including wind energy, to meet the UK's energy requirement over a 40-year time horizon were published in two reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. They are "ETSU R83: An Appraisal of UK Energy Research, Development, Demonstration and Dissemination" and "ETSU R82: An Assessment of Renewable Energy for the UK."

Dogs (Exports)

Mr. Gale: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many dogs were exported for sale from the United Kingdom in each of the past five years; and to what destinations. [17043]

Mr. Nelson: The information requested is not available as the United Kingdom trade classification does not separately identify dogs.

Industrial Tribunals (Utilities)

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the number of industrial tribunal cases heard involving (i) British Gas (ii) British Telecom, (iii) National Power, Powergen, National Grid and Nuclear Electric, (iv) the East Midlands Electricity, (v) Eastern Electricity, (vi) London Electricity, (vii) MANWEB, (viii) Midlands Electricity, (ix) Northern Electricity, (x) Norweb (xi) Seeboard, (xii) Southern Electricity, (xiii) South Wales Electricity, (xiv) South Western Electricity and (xv) Yorkshire Electricity in 1995, (b) in how many cases, and in what percentage of occasions, the tribunal found against the company and (c) the monetary value of any award set by the tribunal in each case. [16619]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the number of industrial tribunal cases heard involving (i) British Gas in 1985, (ii) British Telecom in 1983, (iii) the Central Electricity Generating Board in 1988, (iv) the East Midlands Electricity Board in 1989, (v) Eastern Electricity Board in 1989, (vi) the London Electricity Board, (vii) MANWEB in 1989, (viii) the Midlands Electricity Board in 1989, (ix) the Northern Electricity Board in 1989, (x) Norweb in 1989, (xi) Seeboard in 1989, (xii) the Southern Electricity Board in 1989, (xiii) the South Wales Electricity Board in 1989, (xiv) the South Western Electricity Board in 1989 and (xv) the Yorkshire Electricity Board in 1989, (b) in how many cases, and in what percentage of occasions, the tribunal found against the company and (c) the monetary value of any award set by the tribunal in each case. [16618]

Mr. Taylor: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Textile Manufacturing

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of household textiles retailing in the United Kingdom were manufactured in the United Kingdom. [16831]

Mr. Eggar: The information is not available for the retail market. However, in 1994, UK manufacturers' ex-factory domestic sales of household textiles represented 61 per cent. of the UK market, calculated from these and overseas trade statistics.

Marks and Spencer

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with Marks and Spencer since 1992 concerning its policy on United Kingdom sourcing of goods sold by it. [16832]

Mr. Page: Ministers and officials from my Department have regular contact with Marks and Spencer, as with other major UK companies. These discussions have covered the company's strong relationship with its UK suppliers and how it can be maintained.

Exports

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of exports of (a) military goods and services, (b) dual-use goods and services and (c) other goods and services between 1974 and 1979. [16902]

Mr. Nelson: Information on UK exports of identified defence equipment and total goods and services is given in the table. Information on defence services and on dual-use goods and services is not available.

Value of UK exports

£ million, current prices

Year	Military goods	Total goods	Total services	Total goods and services
1974	179	16,191	6,597	22,788
1975	198	19,429	7,678	27,107
1976	218	25,139	10,010	35,149
1977	356	31,921	11,615	43,536

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes have been made since the opening of the Scott inquiry into the criteria adopted by his Department in deciding whether to give substantive replies to parliamentary questions seeking details of arms or military equipment exports from the United Kingdom. [15971]

Mr. Lang: No such changes have been made. It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose details about export licences that have been issued. However, the Government have from time to time released such information in exceptional circumstances where it was clearly in the public interest. I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made on Thursday 15 February, Official Report, columns 1139-44, in relation to Sir Richard Scott's recommendations on this matter.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to paragraph C 2.62 of the Scott report, if he will list the exports of (a) machine tools and

(b) other equipment sent to Iraq under temporary licences and subsequently incorporated into the Iraqi weapon producing system between 1980 and 1991. [17343]

Mr. Lang: I am not in a position to state with certainty what equipment was incorporated into the Iraqi weapon producing system. Sir Richard Scott addressed these issues in detail in sections D2.46 to D2.51, D6.55 to D6.72 and D6.194 to D6.220 of his report and I have nothing to add to his description of what equipment was sent to Iraq under temporary licences.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16539]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: A small number of civil servants in each of the main Departments concerned had access to the report prior to publication for the purpose of preparing the Government's response. Such access was in accordance with the conditions laid down by the Scott inquiry.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16578]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: On Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16598]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main Departments concerned in accordance with the procedure agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give the cost of the work.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry. [16562]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in the main departments concerned in accordance with the procedures agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials will have contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give their number or grades.

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16494]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: During the afternoon of Wednesday 7 February 1996.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16023]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is as follows:

Those non-departmental public bodies that are:

(a) Subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner:

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service

Coal Authority

Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action

Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members and the DTI's seven Research Councils

(b) Subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission:

None.

(c) Subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office

The NAO's access to DTI's NDPBs is detailed in "Public Bodies 1995" which is available in the Library of the House

(d) Subject to statutory provisions for open government:

NDPBs subject to the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commission for Administration are covered by the code of practice on access to government information. Other NDPBs will be asked to draw up their own codes of openness.

(e) Subject to performance indicators:

Performance measures have been or are being introduced to all DTI's NDPBs when they are appropriate.

(f) Subject to provisions under the citizens charter:

All DTI's NDPBs are encouraged to follow citizens charter principles where they are appropriate.

Export Controls

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to review the Government's powers under the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939. [17232]

Mr. Lang: The Government are considering Sir Richard Scott's recommendations and will be publishing a consultation paper.

Business Links

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what considerations led him to provide a freephone business link telephone service for businesses in England; and if he will make a statement. [15880]

Mr. Page: Business link inquiries have been handled by the original enterprise initiative freephone number, 0800 500 200, since May 1995. This will be discontinued at the end of the current financial year because the enterprise initiative is no longer operational.

A dedicated business link helpline was set up in October 1995 at the time of the business link national launch. The 0345 567765 lo-call number provides callers with a central inquiry point with direct switching to their nearest business link. A single national number is essential for any reference to business link in the national media.

Christopher Muttukumaru

Mr. Janner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16554]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: My officials and I have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru. Sir Richard is free to publish any document he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Iraq (Export Credit Guarantees)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each year since 1985–86 the proportions attributable to awards to Iraq of (a) the amount in default and (b) the amount written off relating to export credit guarantees. [16005]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 19 February 1996]: The information is as follows:

Claims paid and amounts written off by ECGD on Iraq by financial year from 1985–86:

£ million

Year	Claims paid	Amounts written off
1985–86	3	0
1986–87	4	0
1987–88	6	0
1988–89	28	4
1989–90	56	0
1990–91	193	0
1993–94	61	0
1994–95	46	3
1995–96[1]	14	2

[1] To 31 January.

The above table reports all claims paid by the ECGD on Iraq. For this reason, the total of £696 million is higher than the claims figure of £683 million which I cited in my written reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 15 January 1996, Official Report, columns 353-54. The latter figure excluded claims cases under the ECGD's now privatised credit insurance operations where the debt has been recovered in its entirety. All such cases predate the invasion of Kuwait in August 1990.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Grand Committee

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what has been the cost of each meeting of the Scottish Grand Committee in the current session to date; and what is the estimated cost of each of those planned for the remainder of the Session. [12960]

Mr. Beith [holding answer 22 February 1996]: The information is not readily available in the form requested, because not all costs are analysed to individual meetings. The extra costs which relate to travel, accommodation, communication and additional staff time for those meetings of the Scottish Grand Committee held in Scotland have been forecast at £102,000 for the financial year to 31 March 1996 and £162,000 for the financial year to 31 March 1997. Sums expended in the current Session, to 31 January 1996, amount to £28,501.

TRANSPORT

East Coast Main Line

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the amount of debt outstanding at the time of train operations being wound up by Stagecoach on the east coast main line; how much has been repaid to date; and at what times. [17131]

Mr. Watts: This is a commercial matter between British Rail and Stagecoach. I understand that BR allowed Stagecoach Holdings plc to withdraw without penalty from its contract or provide overnight seated train services from Aberdeen, Dundee and Edinburgh to London and return.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16535]

Sir George Young [holding answer 22 February 1996]: No member of my Department saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to this office. [16496]

Sir George Young [holding answer 22 February 1996]: During the afternoon of Friday 16 February.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for transport when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16582]

Sir George Young [holding answer 22 February 1996]: At 3.30 pm on Thursday 15 February, when I collected a copy from the Vote Office at the House of Commons.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16472]

Sir George Young [holding answer 22 February 1996]: None.

Rail Franchising

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 273, what instructions he has issued since 1 January to the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising regarding the rate at which services are to be franchised. [17036]

Mr. Watts: None.

Rail Timetables

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he has issued to the Director of Passenger Rail Franchising and the chairman of the British Railways Board regarding the inclusion of additional recovery time in timetables. [16986]

Mr. Watts: None.

Railway Privatisation

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sanctions exist for refusal by private sector railway operating companies to affiliate to the Association of Train Operating Companies. [16981]

Mr. Watts: Membership of ATOC is not mandatory. However, all passenger operators are required under the terms of their licences and/or franchise agreements to participate in a number of mandatory schemes which are administered by ATOC. These are the ticketing and settlement scheme, the London Regional Transport scheme, discount card schemes for the elderly, disabled and young, the telephone inquiry bureaux scheme and the staff travel scheme.

Railways (Disabled Access)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the rail regulator to discuss disabled persons' access to the rail network. [16781]

Mr. Watts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the rail regulator on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of rail transport issues. His next meeting is planned for Tuesday 5 March.

Railtrack

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many staff are currently employed at the head office of Railtrack; and how many he expects to be employed in the financial years 1996–97 and 1997–98. [16984]

Mr. Watts: At 3 February, the headquarters directorates of Railtrack employed a total of 1,300 people; staffing levels for the company after it is privatised will be a matter for Railtrack.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each regulatory body for which he is responsible indicating for each the percentage of business people on the board. [15736]

Mr. Watts: The table lists the agencies and authorities for which the Secretary of State is responsible and which could be defined as regulatory bodies.

Agency or authority	Percentage of business representatives
Vehicle Certification Agency	17
Vehicle Inspectorate Executive Agency	33
Marine Safety Agency	20
Driving Standards Agency	33
Driver Vehicle and Licensing Agency	43
Civil Aviation Authority	36

Although not part of this Department, the Secretary of State, under the Railways Act 1993, also appointed an independent rail regulator, John Swift QC, to head the Office of Rail Regulation, which has no advisory board and is directly answerable to Parliament.

Gospel Oak to Barking Line

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many valentine cards he has received from users of the Gospel Oak to Barking line. [16230]

Mr. Norris: About 700.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish maps showing projections, at national and regional level, of future traffic congestion on the trunk road system as a basis for assessing likely requirements for improvement to the United Kingdom's infrastructure; and if he will undertake also to publish revised projections in future taking account of changes to economic and traffic forecasts. [13987]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 8 February 1996]: I am placing maps of current congestion, and projections of future congestion, in the Library of the House together with an explanatory note. The maps will be kept up to date as appropriate.

Sea Empress Incident

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of costs arising from efforts to control oil pollution originating from the Sea Empress. [17074]

Mr. Norris: As at midday Friday 23 February, the known costs to the marine pollution control unit exceeded £2 million, excluding some significant costs where information is not yet available. We would seek to recover these costs from the ship's insurers or from the international oil pollution compensation fund. Estimates of costs incurred by others is not currently available.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what quantity of oil-dispersant chemicals have so far been used on oil slicks originating from the Sea Empress. [17077]

Mr. Norris: By midday Friday 23 February, 444 tonnes of dispersants had been used.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many crew were on the Sea Empress at the time it ran aground; and what was their nationality. [17076]

Mr. Norris: Twenty-seven Russian crew members and a local pilot were on board.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many oil-retaining sea booms have been used to control oil coming from the Sea Empress. [17078]

Mr. Norris: As at 10:00 on Monday 26 February, some 2,250 metres of boom were in place.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what tests were carried out on the captain of the Sea Empress following the ship running aground. [17125]

Mr. Norris: Drug and alcohol tests were carried out on all 27 crew of the Sea Empress. None were found to be positive.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration is being given to bringing criminal charges against (a) the owner and (b) the captain of the Sea Empress. [17126]

Mr. Norris: Whether it is appropriate to consider criminal proceedings against any party in respect of the Sea Empress will depend on the findings of the investigations that are being undertaken into the incident.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of sea birds affected by oil originating from the Sea Empress. [17075]

Mr. Norris: As at 10:00 on Monday 26 February, it was reported that 1,640 birds had been affected.

Land Compensation Act 1973

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to amend the Land Compensation Act 1973 to allow tenants to claim compensation for disturbance to carpets and curtains, without being relocated to another property. [16042]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

Under the 1973 Act, tenants are entitled to certain categories of compensation, such as a fixed amount of £1,500 as a home loss payment. Tenants may claim some disturbance compensation for incidental losses such as removal expenses, the cost of altering soft furnishings and moveable fixtures and fittings. Tenants who need professional help in preparing and negotiating a claim may also claim for the fee of a surveyor or solicitor, but there is no power, and there are no plans to introduce a power, to pay compensation to tenants where they do not have to move.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Know-how Funds (Tourism)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the tourism projects which have been supported by the know-how funds. [16336]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The know-how fund has supported 19 tourism projects since 1989 at a total cost of approximately £1.63 million. The projects are listed in the table.

Country	Project title	Financial year	Approved costs £
Bulgaria	Tourism Management Development	1994–98	500,000

Slovenia	Sustainable Tourism	1993–94	1,500
	Timeshare Legislation	1994–95	20,700

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what small business projects have been supported by the know-how funds; of these which related to tourism; and if she will list them. [16326]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The know-how fund has supported more than 650 small business projects. Of these, the following four related directly to tourism:

Poland

Cracow Tourism Study, 1989–90: Approved costs £37,000

Slovakia

SME Tourism Development Poprad, 1994–95: Approved costs £34,000

Slovenia

Timeshare Legislation, 1994–95: Approved costs £20,700
Sustainable Tourism, 1993–94: Approved costs £1,500

Indonesia

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans (a) he has and (b) other Ministers in his Department have to visit Indonesia. [16395]

Mr. Hanley: We have no immediate plans to do so.

Italian Constitution

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions HM ambassador to Rome has had with Italian political parties about proposals to reform the Italian constitution; and if he will make a statement. [16308]

Mr. David Davis: In the course of normal contacts, HM ambassador to Rome and colleagues have discussed proposals to reform the Italian constitution with representatives of parties across the Italian political spectrum.

Ministerial Visit (Cyprus)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he (a) has had and (b) will have with the leader of the British delegation to the Council of Europe following his visit to the Karpass area of occupied northern Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [16310]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has not been in contact with Lord Finsberg following his recent visit to Cyprus. The British high commissioner in Nicosia spoke with Lord Finsberg during his visit.

We support efforts to uphold the human rights of Cypriots in whatever part of the island they live. We welcome the recent announcement by the Turkish Cypriots of measures to improve the living conditions for Greek Cypriots and Maronites living in northern Cyprus. There is no reason why the remaining restrictions on basic freedoms for minorities should not be lifted.

United Nations Special Commission on Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current United Kingdom financial commitment to the United Nations Special Commission on Iraq. [16303]

Mr. David Davis: We have made a significant contribution to the work of the United Nations Special Commission since its inception in 1991 through the provision of specialist personnel and equipment. In the current financial year this has had a value of some £1 million, which is broadly in line with the support provided in previous years. We do not make a direct financial contribution.

Social Welfare Provision (Germany)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's ambassador to Bonn has made of Germany's ability to maintain its current level of social welfare provision over the next 20 years; and if he will make a statement. [16307]

Mr. David Davis: Due to the many factors which have to be taken into consideration, such an assessment is impossible to make. It is up to individual states to establish their economic priorities.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Sri Lanka; and what plans he has to visit the country. [16511]

Mr. Hanley: Relations with Sri Lanka are good. We support the Sri Lankan Government's efforts to secure a lasting and peaceful settlement and urge all who are concerned to make every effort to persuade the Liberation Tamil Tigers Eelam to respond positively to the constitutional opportunities on offer. I visited Sri Lanka last October and have no immediate plans to visit again.

Visa Applications (Waiting Times)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current waiting times for interviews for visa application in respect of (a) spouses, (b) fiances, (c) visitors, (d) dependants, (e) business visitors and (f) quota vouchers, at (i) Bombay, (ii) New Delhi, (iii) Dacca, (iv) Karachi, (v) Islamabad, (vi) Nairobi, (vii) Dar-es-Salaam and (viii) Kampala. [17055]

Mr. Hanley: In December 1995, the waiting times for interview for visa applicants at the posts listed were:

(i) Bombay
(a) spouses: 3 months
(b) fiance(e)s: 6 months
(c) visitors: same day
(d) dependants: 3 months
(e) business visitors: same day

(ii) New Delhi
(a) spouses: 3 months
(b) fiance(e)s: 7 months
(c) visitors: same day
(d) dependants: 3 months
(e) business visitors: same day

(iii) Dhaka
(a) spouses: 6 months
(b) fiance(e)s: 5 months
(c) visitors: same day
(d) dependants: 6 months
(e) business visitors: same day

(iv) Karachi
(a) spouses: 3 to 7 weeks
(b) fiance(e)s: 3 to 7 weeks
(c) visitors: same day
(d) dependants: 3 to 7 weeks
(e) business visitors: same day

(v) Islamabad
(a) spouses: 4 months
(b) fiance(e)s: 6 months
(c) visitors: same day
(d) dependants: 4 months
(e) business visitors: same day

The waiting times for interview for visa applicants in Nairobi, Dar-es-Salaam and Kampala are not yet available.

For waiting times for persons applying for a special voucher, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by Under-Secretary of State for the Home Office, my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Leeds, North (Mr. Kirkhope) to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) on 9 January, Official Report, column 198.

Police Training

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Indonesian police officers have received training in the United Kingdom in each year since 1990; and if he will list for each officer the (a) name, (b) rank, (c) cost of training, (d) duration of training, (e) United Kingdom police force which provided the training and (f) Government department which provided the funding. [16941]

Mr. David Davis: The details of training given under the United Kingdom military training assistance scheme are confidential between Governments. Details of training funded by other Government Departments are not available.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions he (a) has taken and (b) plans to take as a result of the recommendations of the Scott report. [16959]

Mr. Hanley: The recommendations of the Scott report are being carefully considered by the FCO and other interested Departments. Some recommendations, for example on intelligence handling, have already been adopted.

Kashmir

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the potential role of the Commonwealth in facilitating peace negotiations between the Governments of India and Pakistan and representatives of the Kashmiri people. [16940]

Mr. Hanley: We believe that the Commonwealth could play a mediatory role only at the request of both India and Pakistan. We continue to urge the two countries to resolve their differences over Kashmir through dialogue.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to give a substantive reply to the letter dated 13 December 1995 from the hon. Member for Bradford, North concerning visa facilities in former Yugoslavia. [16915]

Mr. Hanley: I replied on 8 January. I have arranged for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member.

Montserrat

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he has received in relation to possible worsening of volcanic activity on the island of Montserrat; and if he will make a statement. [16977]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Since 18 July 1995, we have received regular reports from scientists from the UK and the Trinidad-based seismic research unit, which is monitoring the volcano 24 hours a day.

Montserrat remains on a state of alert and we have put in place contingency plans to evacuate Montserratians to the north of the island in the event of a partial eruption. Contingency plans also exist for a full evacuation of the island if it became necessary.

Ecuador (Father Colin MacInnes)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what report he has received on progress by the central bank of Ecuador in recovering funds gathered by Father Colin MacInnes in Scotland and other moneys intended for community development purposes. [17166]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The recovery of these funds is a matter for the Ecuadorian authorities. However, our embassy is closely monitoring the situation.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Ecuadorian authorities concerning the safety of Father Colin MacInnes. [17165]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Our embassy in Quito is in direct contact with Father MacInnes about his situation. It has also registered its interest with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Imia

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what international agreements govern the sovereignty of the island of Imia. [15671]

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 16 February 1996]: The two sides do not agree on the question precisely because they take different views of the relevance of international documents concerned. The 1923 treaty of Lausanne, two agreements of 1932, and the 1947 Paris treaty of peace with Italy are among these.

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, if the 1947 agreement is the basis of the international law in respect of sovereignty over Imia. [15723]

Mr. Davis [holding answer 19 February 1996]: The two sides do not agree on the question precisely because they take different views of the relevance of international documents concerned. The 1923 treaty of Lausanne, two agreements of 1932, and the 1947 Paris treaty of peace with Italy are among these.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessments were made by (a) his departmental officials and (b) departmental Ministers of the reliability of information provided by Mr. Paul Henderson, while managing director of Matrix Churchill, on the status of the Iraqi military procurement network. [15692]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 16 February 1996]: Details of the information supplied by Mr. Paul Henderson on the Iraqi military procurement network are covered in sections D and G of the report of Sir Richard Scott's inquiry. We do not propose to comment further on the sources of intelligence material.

HEALTH

Drug Purchases

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the monitoring mechanism to ensure that hospital trusts that purchase drugs from abroad meet British standards. [15889]

Mr. Malone: Licensed medicinal products imported from outside the European Union are required to undergo a full qualitative and quantitative analysis of at least all the active constituents and all other tests or checks necessary to ensure that the product is in full compliance with its marketing authorisation. Unlicensed medicines may be imported to fulfil a bona fide unsolicited order from a doctor or dentist on his or her personal responsibility. A condition of this exemption is that the importer should hold the appropriate wholesale dealer's licence and comply with its conditions.

Thalidomide

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued to hospital trusts about purchasing thalidomide, and if he will make a statement. [15896]

Mr. Malone: No guidance specifically relating to purchasing has been issued for the drug thalidomide. "Guidance on thalidomide" was published by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Medicines Control Agency in the May 1994 issue of "Current Problems in Pharmocovigilance", a drug safety bulletin circulated to all doctors, dentists, pharmacists and coroners. This guidance note strongly advised all doctors considering the use of thalidomide to follow detailed external guidelines on the clinical use and distribution of thalidomide, which were published in a widely available medical journal. A reminder was published in the July 1995 issue.

Management Consultancy

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure incurred by (a) his Department and (b) the NHS executive on management consultancy in each year since 1992–93. [16245]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 20 February at column 109.

Professions Supplementary to Medicines Act

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the review of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960 will be completed; [16246]

(2) what findings the review of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960 has made in relation to physiotherapy; [16247]

(3) if he can now release the findings of the review of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960. [16248]

Mr. Horam: We expect to receive a report on this shortly. An announcement will be made in due course.

Registered Homes Tribunal

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how appeals to the registered homes tribunal are processed and investigated; and if she will place in the Library a copy of the rules or guidelines which govern the work of the tribunal. [16410]

Mr. Bowis: The registered homes tribunal hears all appeals made under part III of the Registered Homes Act 1984. The registered homes tribunal secretariat receives notices of appeals and makes the administrative arrangements for appeals to be heard. The registered homes tribunal is an independent judicial body and is wholly responsible for reaching and making its decisions taking account of all the evidence laid before it. It operates within the Registered Homes Tribunal Rules 1984, SI 1984 No. 1346. A copy of the public booklet about appeals process is available in the Library.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appeals have been considered by the registered homes tribunal in each year since 1984; and how many have been upheld. [16408]

Mr. Bowis: The information is shown in the table.

Year	Total	Allowed
1985	9	2
1986	37	7
1987	17	5
1988	14	7
1989	24	8
1990	24	12
1991	34	16
1992	37	16
1993	25	4
1994	24	11
1995	25	5

1. In six of the cases above, part of the appeal was also dismissed.
2. The tribunal considered a further three cases but ruled that they had no jurisdiction to hear the appeals.
3. The figures do not include the appeals withdrawn before hearing.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how members of the registered homes tribunal are appointed; and if he will list the names and occupations of tribunal members in each year since 1984. [16409]

Mr. Bowis: All chairmen are barristers or solicitors and are appointed by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor. Expert members are appointed by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council from nominations made by various professional and other organisations involved in the nursing and residential care sector.

The registered homes tribunal began hearing appeals in 1985. Tribunal chairmen and expert members are normally appointed to serve for five years. Supplementary appointments are made when necessary. The names and occupations of those appointed from and including 1985 to 1994 are shown. I refer the hon. Member to the reply

I gave the Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 16 February at columns 741-43, for the list of members appointed in 1995.

Coronary Angiography

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the guidelines provided under the terms of the patients charter on acceptable waiting times for coronary angiography. [16459]

Mr. Horam: The patients charter does not contain guidelines specifically on waiting times for coronary angiography. This procedure is normally carried out on an in-patient or day-care basis and where a patient is placed on a waiting list they must be admitted within 18 months of joining the list.

Mental Health

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1995, Official Report, column 939, if he will make a statement on the arrangements for making payments out of the mental health challenge fund. [16789]

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health published, on 20 February, the detailed criteria for applications to the mental health challenge fund, copies of which are available in the Library.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1995, Official Report, column 939, what assessment he has made of the reports from regional directors of the NHS executive relating to health authorities' purchasing plans for mental health services. [16788]

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health published, on 20 February, a review of the purchasing of mental health services by health authorities in England, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private finance initiative schemes for mental health services have now been agreed. [16796]

Mr. Horam: Four private finance initiative schemes specifically for mental health services in the national health service have been approved, each valued at £1 million or more. Details of schemes with a capital cost of less than £1 million are not available centrally.

Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric beds have closed in each year since 1980–81. [16795]

Mr. Bowis: Information on the numbers of beds closed is not available centrally.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor-outdoor wheelchairs by health authorities in England in each of the last three years; [17031]

(2) what expenditure has been incurred by health authorities in England for the purchase of electrically powered indoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years; [17072]

(3) what expenditure has been incurred by health authorities in England for the purchase of electrically powered indoor-outdoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years; [17186]

(4) how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor wheelchairs by health authorities in each of the last three years. [17196]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor-outdoor wheelchair; [16995]

(2) what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor wheelchair. [17188]

Mr. Bowis: The cost will depend on individual circumstances and the type of chair supplied.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what conclusions have been reached by the departmental working group set up by his Department to look at the feasibility of introducing a voucher scheme for the provision of indoor-outdoor and indoor electrically powered wheelchairs; and what is the proposed value of the voucher. [17016]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mrs. Lait) on 22 February at column 291.

Residential Care

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the additional resources he proposes to make available to social services authorities in England will fully reimburse the costs those authorities will incur as a result of the proposals relating to the treatment of capital for those in long-term residential care and nursing homes announced in November 1995; [16800]

(2) if he will monitor actual expenditure incurred by social services authorities in order to meet the requirements of the proposals relating to the treatment of capital for all people in long-term residential care and nursing homes announced in November 1995; and if he will make available additional funding to meet any shortfall between the resources provided for authorities and the expenditure they actually incur. [16802]

Mr. Bowis: We are currently discussing with local authority representatives the resources to be made available in respect of the changes in the treatment of capital. Decisions will be announced shortly.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he intends to raise the thresholds for treatment of capital for people in long-term residential care and nursing homes in future years. [16801]

Mr. Bowis: We have already announced such an increase to come into effect on 8 April. Thereafter, the levels will be kept under review.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department collects on the costs to the NHS of the process of applying for private finance initiative schemes. [16790]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 15 January at column 337. Further information is not available centrally.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish details of the consortiums that have been successful in private finance initiative bids. [11211]

Mr. Horam [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1996, c. 159–61]: I regret that there was an error in the information provided.

The private sector partner for the United Leeds teaching hospital power station scheme is AHS Emstar Plc, not ULTH Charitable Trust/Medley as stated previously.

Renal Services

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 8 February, Official Report, column 348, what have been the factors that have led to the delay in the publication of the report by the national review of renal services. [17093]

Mr. Horam: Although the review was completed some time ago, it has taken a considerable time to consider all its implications. It was also necessary to commission additional work to develop a model to predict the changing pattern of need in this area. This is nearly complete and will be published with the purchasing guidance.

NHS Administration

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total remuneration of each NHS district health authority general manager. [17402]

Mr. Malone: The information will be placed in the Library. The figures need to be treated with caution. The payments listed represent renumeration in respect of the total gross salary, bonus payments, monetary value of benefits in kind, taxable expenses allowances and compensation payments in relation to the offices described—rather than to an individual. Thus payments listed for a particular district health authority could refer to more than one individual.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total remuneration of NHS district health authorities' general managers in each year since 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995. [17163]

Mr. Malone: The salaries and wages costs of national health service district health authority general managers for the years 1990–91 to 1994–95 are shown in the table:

1990–91	11,363,000
1991–92	11,219,218
1992–93	11,685,299
1993–94	8,800, 247
1994–95	6,881,200

Source: The annual financial returns of district health authorities.
Notes:
1. The figures include employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions.
2. The 1994–95 figures are provisional.

Children Act 1989 (Contact Orders)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the most frequent pattern of contact arranged under orders made under section 8 of the Children Act 1989. [15950]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have been asked to reply. The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and accordingly I have asked him to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Mike Gapes, dated 23 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your Question about section 8 orders. He was originally asked to reply to this Question by the Secretary of State for Health.

The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many court orders relating to contact or access broke down and involved the need for further court action (a) prior to and (b) since the coming into operation of the Children Act 1989. [15962]

Mr. Evans: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the most frequent pattern of access or contact arranged by court orders prior to the Children Act 1989. [15949]

Mr. Evans: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the expenditure of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on all external consultants including management consultants for each of the years (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95 and (f) 1995–96 (i) to date and (ii) as estimated for the whole year; what estimate he has made of such expenditure for 1996–97; and if he will estimate the savings accruing to his Department from the use of consultants in each of these years. [11367]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 25 January 1996]: Information prior to 1991 and details of savings accruing, which are not held centrally, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The cost of employing consultants in the other years requested is shown in the table. The figures include expenditure incurred on professional fees in connection with the privatisation programme.

Expenditure on consultancy

	£ million (excluding VAT)
1991–92	9.1
1993–94	6.4
1994–95	5.5
1995–96 (to date)	1.9
1995–96 (whole year estimate)	2.0

Detailed figures as to expenditure on consultants in future years are not yet available.

Pensioners

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to ensure that pensioners will benefit from any increased prosperity of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [15060]

Mr. Waldegrave: As a result of the Government's successful economic policies, average pensioner incomes have risen by more than 50 per cent. in real terms since 1979.

Tax-exempt Investments

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the investment in (a) personal equity plans and (b) tax-exempt special savings accounts is new investment; if he will estimate the proportion and sources diverted from other forms of savings; and if he will list the research his Department has (i) commissioned and (ii) evaluated in respect of this data. [15195]

Mr. Jack: Both PEPs and TESSAs have been very successful in achieving the objectives, respectively, of widening share ownership and encouraging longer-term saving. The most directly relevant research on savings is based on 1991 market research data from RSGB Ltd., from which Inland Revenue purchased additional analyses, and on work that is now part of the Institute for Fiscal Studies savings project, for which HM Treasury and Inland Revenue are among the sponsors, using data from the financial research survey. Both sources suggest that most of the funds going to TESSAs do not represent new savings, which a considerable amount coming from other deposit accounts, but for PEPs the IFS work so far suggests that there may be a somewhat greater element of new equity investment.

Construction Industry (Cash Payments)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines govern the Inland Revenue's powers to make assumptions as to the annual amount of work undertaken by firms in the construction and building industries for cash payments; and if he will make a statement. [15386]

Mr. Jack: Where business accounts have not been submitted to the Inland Revenue or, if submitted, the tax inspector is not satisfied that the full extent of the profits have been declared, the inspector may make an assessment to tax to the best of his or her judgment. The Revenue has not issued guidance specific to the construction industry, but its general guidance to inspectors is to estimate as reasonably and accurately as possible the likely income, cash or otherwise. In making estimated assessments, inspectors will take into account the facts and circumstances of each case—for example, profits agreed in previous years, trends in the particular trade of profession, specific evidence of the extent of the taxpayer's income and so on. Any assessment is open to appeal by the taxpayer to the independent appeal commissioners.

Pension Funds

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 582, if he will estimate the value of pension entitlement which has accrued in each of the unfunded public sector pension schemes. [15397]

Mr. Waldegrave: Precise and up-to-date figures are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The latest information available, for the main unfunded public service schemes referred to in the answer of 16 January, relates to 31 March 1993 data and salary levels. The estimate of total liabilities in respect of the then active and former members, accrued to that date—including allowance for anticipated future salary and pension increases—is about £230 billion, made up approximately as follows:

	£ billion
NHS	55
Teachers	70
Civil Service	40
Armed Forces	35
Police	25
Fire	5
Total	230

Taxation

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update to include information from 1993–94 to 1997–98 the figures for the burden of direct and indirect taxation in the format used in his answer of 19 December 1994, Official Report, columns 944–50, taking account of changes made in the November 1995 Budget, listing separately the effects of the council tax and value added tax. [15106]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 14 February 1996]: A family on average earnings should be around £450 a year better off next year than this after tax and inflation, taking the total rise since 1978–79 to £4,500 a year. The tables show estimates of tax payments for various specimen households for the years 1993–94 to 1996–97. Changes in tax payments between years mainly reflect assumed growth in average earnings and should not be taken as the impact of Budget measures.

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate. Child benefit is treated as a negative income tax in order to provide comparability with support given through child tax allowances.
2. Earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. Estimates of earnings in 1995–96 and 1996–97 are based on earnings growth assumptions of 3½ per cent. in 1995–96 and 4 per cent. in 1996–97.
3. Figures for indirect taxes include estimates of the intermediate taxes on households as well as the impact of taxes on final goods and services. Estimates of the impact of taxes on final goods and services assume that these taxes are fully incident on households. Estimates of the impact of intermediate taxes are based on the relation between intermediate production costs and final consumption derived using input-output techniques.
4. Estimates for most indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. Estimates of VAT on domestic fuel and power, airline passenger duty and insurance premium tax are based on equations using results from the 1991 and 1992 Family Expenditure Survey uprated using a similar methodology. All estimates are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved.
5. Estimates of net council tax payments are based on analysis of the Family Expenditure Survey for the relevant year. Payment data for these years is affected by uncertainty about transitional relief, appeals and late payment. The estimates are therefore particularly uncertain and subject to a wide margin of error. No reliable estimates are available for 1993–94.
6. Estimates of indirect taxes are very approximate, even within the range for which figures are shown, because spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income. The margin of error is even higher outside the range shown, and even illustrative estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from Family Expenditure Surveys for different years.

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the households receive no tax reliefs other than the standard allowances and only have income from employment. All earners, including wives, are assumed to pay Class 1 NI contributions at the contracted-in rate. Child benefit is treated as a negative income tax in order to provide comparability with support given through child tax allowances.

2. Earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. Estimates of earnings in 1995–96 and 1996–97 are based on earnings growth assumptions of 3½ per cent. in 1995–96 and 4 per cent. in 1996–97.

3. Figures for indirect taxes include estimates of the intermediate taxes on households as well as the impact of taxes on final goods and services. Estimates of the impact of taxes on final goods and services assume that these taxes are fully incident on households. Estimates of the impact of intermediate taxes are based on the relation between intermediate production costs and final consumption derived using input-output techniques.

4. Estimates for most indirect taxes are based on equations derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey uprated to later years using forecasts of aggregate tax receipts. Estimates of VAT on domestic fuel and power, airline passenger duty and insurance premium tax are based on equations using results from the 1991 and 1992 Family Expenditure Survey uprated using a similar methodology. All estimates are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved.

5. Estimates of net council tax payments are based on analysis of the Family Expenditure Survey for the relevant year. Payment data for these years is affected by uncertainty about transitional relief, appeals and late payment. The estimates are therefore particularly uncertain and subject to a wide margin of error. No reliable estimates are available for 1993–94.

6. Estimates of indirect taxes are very approximate, even within the range for which figures are shown, because spending patterns vary widely between households with the same composition and income. The margin of error is even higher outside the range shown, and even illustrative estimates cannot be made. Because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between estimates obtained from Family Expenditure Surveys for different years.

Private Medical Insurance

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will add osteopathic and chiropractor treatments to the list of those paid for from private medical insurance policies that are eligible for tax relief. [15467]

Mr. Jack: Private medical insurance relief is aimed at policies that offer types of treatment normally provided free of charge by the NHS. When the relief was introduced in 1989, the then Chief Secretary to the Treasury said in Committee: "We shall not include treatments not normally available under the National Health Service". [Official Report, Standing Committee G, 25 May 1989, c.229].

Osteopathy and chiropracty are usually provided privately, so insurance policies that indemnify the cost of these treatments are not eligible for private medical insurance relief.

I have no plans to alter the current rules regarding eligibility of polices.

Income Tax

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would the single positive rate of income tax need to be in 1996–97, assuming a personal allowance of £5,000 and the abolition of all other tax expenditures, exemptions and reliefs now allowable against income tax, in order to introduce it on a revenue rental basis. [16078]

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that a single rate of about 23 per cent. would be needed in 1996–97 to achieve revenue neutrality. This assumes a personal allowance of £5,000 and the abolition of all other income tax allowances, and mortgage interest relief, tax relief on employees contributions to occupational and personal pension schemes, reliefs for TESSAs, PEPs, profit-related pay, national savings certificates, employee share schemes and charitable giving.

This estimate does not take into account the substantial behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a change nor do they allow for any subsequent changes to the tax system, such as changes to tax relief on employer's contributions to pension schemes or relief for investment income in pension funds.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated full year cost in 1996–97 of making the 20 per cent. rate the only positive rate of tax for all income tax payers. [16079]

Mr. Jack: The estimated full year cost of introducing a single 20 per cent. rate of income tax at 1996–97 income levels would be about £16 billion. These estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects that might result from the introduction of the new regime.

Departmental Bills

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants, and at what civil service grades are involved in paying the Treasury's bills. [16201]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 20 February 1996]: Staff in many grades throughout the Treasury are involved in checking invoices for purchases made by their directorates.

In addition, there is a central team for purchasing and bill paying of eight personal at administrative and executive officer grades.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent payment of bills by his Department is computerised. [16196]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 20 February 1996]: Bill paying is computerised, as is the registration of invoices; checking and other steps are not.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent on external legal advice for Ministers and civil servants in relation to the Scott inquiry and report since the period covered by his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 527. [15929]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The value of accounts settled from public funds by my departments in the period since the making of the payments comprising the sum given in my answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 527, for the provision of external legal services on behalf of civil servants in connection with the Scott inquiry and report, is £3,037. There has been no comparable expenditure on behalf of ministers.

Self-assessment

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money his Department expects to be collected under self-assessment in 1996–97 from overpayment of income tax. [16202]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 February 1996]: No estimate has been made. The payments collected under self-assessments in 1996–97 will be the first payments on account for 1996–97, due on 31 January 1997. The amounts due will be based on taxpayers' 1995–96 liabilities. Taxpayers will have the right to claim to reduce the amounts due if they think their tax liability for 1996–97 will be less than for 1995–96.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the proportion of taxpayers due to pay under the self-assessment system who are likely to make errors leading to financial penalties. [16198]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The Department does not expect straightforward errors by taxpayers under self-assessment to lead to financial penalties. The Revenue intends to put right such errors when the return is processed, and taxpayers will not face financial penalties when such "repairs" are made.

Unqualified Tax Advisers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans his Department has to regulate unqualified tax advisers. [16199]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 February 1996]: We currently have no plans to do so.

Low Pay

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effective cost to public funds or low pay; and what plans he has to reduce it. [16389]

Mr. Waldegrave: There is no such cost: having more people in work increases output and reduces public expenditure.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what response he has made to the section on environmental accounting in the second report of the British Government panel on sustainable development; [16612]

(2) if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the British Government panel on sustainable development in paragraph 22 of its second report about the effect of the current emphasis on gross domestic product and gross national product on the decision-making process. [16627]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government expect to publish their response to the second report of the Government panel on sustainable development towards the end of March.

Earnings

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (i) men and (ii) women, between the ages of (a) 16 to 24 years, (b) 25 to 49 years and (c) 50 to 64 years are employed but earn less than the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions; and what proportion such people make of the total working population of each sex in each age group. [16616]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Information from the labour force survey of spring 1995 is shown in the table:

LFS—Spring 1995 (GB)

Age	Employees[1] earning less than £58 per week (thousands)	Percentage of total age group

[1] Earnings information is not available for the self employed.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 537, regarding wages council rates, what were the average wages per hour and per week in each of these industries; what is the national average wage referred to per week; what date the figures relate to; and how many employees were receiving these minimum hourly rates in each industry and in total. [16346]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 22 February 1996]: The average wages referred to by my hon. Friend in his reply of 13 February were calculated from information taken from the new earnings survey of April 1993. The national wage referred to the average gross hourly earnings, excluding overtime, of all full-time employees on adult rates whose pay for the survey period was not affected by absence. This was equal to £7.82 in April 1993. The equivalent average weekly wage was £316.90. Further information from the new earnings survey is provided in the attached table.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many national insurance numbers have been issued in each of the past five years for which figures are available to individuals who are not citizens of the United Kingdom but are (a) European Economic Area nationals or (b) nationals of countries outside the European Economic Area. [13734]

Mr. Heald: The information requested is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

National Insurance numbers issued to persons arriving from:

	An EEA member state	Outside the EEA
1990–91	64,800	119,900
1991–92	44,000	100,500

1993–94	52,700	85,400
1994–95	50,600	72,500

Notes:

EEA—European Economic Area.

The differentiation between EEA member states and countries outside the EEA is not based on nationality, it is based on the person's country of residence before arrival in the UK.Source:

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom the number of cold weather payments made in each year since 1992. [15158]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is contained in the social fund statistical series, "Cold Weather Payments by District Offices" held in the statistical section of the Library.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many new claimants appealed against the rejection of their claim to disability living allowance in the year 1994–95; and how many of those claimants were successful in their appeal; [15199]

(2) if he will estimate the average cost to the Benefits Agency of each appeal against the rejection of a new claim to disability living allowance in 1994–95. [15200]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is below.

In 1994–95, 33,799 appeals against adjudication officers' decisions on claims to disability living allowance, disability working allowance or attendance allowance were heard by disability appeal tribunals at an estimated average cost to the independent tribunal service of £315 per appeal.

Benefits (Pensioners)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list in real terms the amount paid out in benefits in the past 30 years; and if he will divide the data according to the amount paid to pensioners and non-pensioner claimants. [15234]

Mr. Heald [holding answer 15 February 1996]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables.

Local Exchange and Trading Schemes

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how participation in a local exchange and trading scheme affects an individual's benefit entitlement. [15431]

Mr. Roger Evans: Credits obtained from participation in local exchange and trading schemes can be exchanged for goods and services in the same way as money. For benefit purposes, therefore, the value of credits is treated in exactly the same way as other earnings. In income support, family credit and disability working allowance, work undertaken within such schemes will also be taken into consideration when applying the 16 hours remunerative work rule.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the figure of housing benefit paid to private landlords in the most recent year. [15910]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information on the amount of housing benefit paid by local authorities directly to private landlords on behalf of their tenants is not routinely collected. However, during the 1994–95 financial year, a total of £4,878 million was paid in housing benefit to tenants of private landlords and housing associations.

Industrial Injury Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the letter of 23 January from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North regarding Mr. D. Mitchell in respect of repayment of industrial injury benefit. [15714]

Mr. Roger Evans: The reply was sent on 16 February.

Housing and Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the information contained in housing benefit and council tax benefit subsidy claim form MPF 720A submitted by each local authority in Gloucestershire in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95. [16141]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each local authority in Gloucestershire in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95 (i) statistic 124 of local authority housing benefit and council tax benefit administration data, (ii) statistic 122, quarterly stock costs, giving caseload—claimants with housing benefit and/or council tax benefit not in receipt of income support—and (iii) statistic 122, quarterly stock costs, giving caseload—claimants with housing benefit and/or council tax benefit also in receipt of income support. [16140]

Mr. Evans: Form STATS 124 is used to collect data concerning the administration of the housing benefit and council tax benefit schemes, and is used essentially for the purposes of producing national estimates. The Department does not publish information from this form on an individual local authority basis due to concerns about its robustness at that level.

Information from the quarterly caseload stock counts, taken on forms STATS 121 and 122, is set out in the tables.

Table 1: Average housing benefit/council tax benefit caseload for each local authority in Gloucestershire—1994–95

Local authority	Housing benefit with income support	Council tax benefit with income support	Housing benefit without income support	Council tax benefit without income support

Stroud	3,300	4,380	2,410	3,640
Tewkesbury	1,880	2,460	1,500	2,330

Notes:
1. Figures given are an average of the four quarters in each year.
2. Figures refer to benefit rules which may be a single person or couple.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest ten.
4. Council tax benefit was introduced from April 1993.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each local authority in Gloucestershire in (a) 1992–93, (b) 1993–94 and (c) 1994–95 the housing benefit expenditure incurred in meeting rents above the rent officer determined level for applicants not belonging to the groups described in regulations 11(3) and 6(b) of the Housing Benefit General Regulations 1987. [16142]

Mr. Evans: The information is as set out in the table:

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each local authority in Gloucestershire the budget for the current year for discretionary payments of housing benefit in cases of exceptional hardship. [16144]

Mr. Evans: To meet cases of exceptional hardship, local authorities are able to spend up to 0.15 per cent. of their expenditure on deregulated tenancies referred to the rent officer. To help authorities with this cost, central Government provide a contribution by way of a subsidy addition. For 1995–96 the amount of subsidy addition available to authorities in Gloucestershire is as follows:

Authority	Amount £
Cheltenham	5,532
Cotswold	2,309
Forest of Dean	1,968
Gloucester City	7,951
Stroud	3,272
Tewkesbury	1,578

The maximum amount authorities will be able to spend is approximately double these sums.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what record his Department holds of the number of people in the United Kingdom who are diagnosed as having myalgic encephalomyelitis or chronic fatigue syndrome and who are in receipt of disability living allowance. [16139]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. The number of people in receipt of disability living allowance at 30 November 1995, where the main disabling condition is shown as chronic fatigue syndrome, including myalgic encephalomyelitis, is estimated to be 7,400.

Fraud (Northumberland)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent special investigations have been undertaken by multi-agency investigation teams into housing benefit and fraud in the west end of Newcastle; and how many charges have been brought. [16148]

Mr. Heald: Joint operations to tackle housing benefit fraud are undertaken from time to time by the local authority with the help of the police, the Benefits Agency and other bodies. A recent operation in the west end of Newcastle involving those organisations has resulted in 18 charges being brought. It would not be appropriate to comment in greater detail on operational matters in order to avoid compromising any future operations.

Weekly benefit savings of £½ million have been achieved.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the recorded staffing levels and average daily attendance at the Benefits Agency offices at Highgate and Finsbury park for (a) January 1992, (b) June 1992, (c) January 1993, (d) June 1993, (e) January 1994, (f) June 1994, (g) January 1995, (h) June 1995 and (i) January 1996; and what estimated level of public expenditure was planned for in each month. [15942]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 22 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what are the recorded staffing levels and average daily attendance at the Benefit Agency offices at Highgate and Finsbury Park for (a) January 1992, (b) June 1992, (c) January 1993, (d) June 1993, (e) January 1994, (f) June 1994, (g) January 1995, (h) June 1995 and (i) January 1996; and what estimated level of public expenditure was planned for in each month.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Motability

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 30 January, Official Report, column 735, on the Schroeders merchant bank report, if officials of his Department have seen the report. [16797]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: With the permission of Motability, officials have had sight of this confidential report.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Marque

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the change in (a) investment, (b) prices and (c) employment in the diary industry since the introduction of Milk Marque. [16460]

Mr. Baldry: On employment and the price of milk for processing, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer he was given by my predecessor on 26 June 1995, Official Report, column 525. We do not monitor retail prices, but in general the price of cheese and butter has gone up since 1 November 1995 while the price of liquid milk has remained fairly static. As regards investment in the diary industry since the abolition of the milk marketing boards, several companies have demonstrated their confidence in the new arrangements by undertaking or announcing major investment programmes.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the veterinary officers and technical assistants were involved on (a) 15 February and (b) 16 February at lairages near Dover in inspecting animals to ensure that they were fit to travel under the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994 and to deal with other related matters; on each such day how many consignments were inspected by his veterinary officers and technical assistants; how many (i) sheep and (ii) calves were inspected; how many hours were spent in carrying out the inspections; and if he will make a statement. [16339]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 February 1996]: On 15 February, there were 13 consignments of calves totalling 1,651 calves and one consignment of 231 sheep. Six Ministry veterinary officers, one temporary veterinary inspector and 10 technical staff were present at Dover lairages at various times between 0700 and 1630.

On 16 February, there were two consignments of calves totalling 205 calves and one consignment of 250 sheep. There were two veterinary officers and two technical staff carrying out the inspections. In addition, the opportunity was taken to train three technical staff. Ministry staff were present at lairages between 0730 and 1230.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Morley: To asks the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what trials of bovine somatotropin are (a) being conducted in the United Kingdom and (b) planned; how many animals are involved; how is the BST being administered; in what quantities is it being administered; what effects are being measured; and if he will make a statement. [16344]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Although the European Commission has accepted that there is no risk to humans from the consumption of milk from cows treated with bovine somatotropin, a moratorium on its marketing and use was introduced throughout the EC in 1990, and after twice being extended is now scheduled to last until 31 December 1999. The terms of the current extension to the moratorium were agreed by the Council Agriculture Ministers at its meeting in December 1994, and allow limited practical tests in order to obtain any other scientific data that might be taken into account by the Council when taking a final decision on the authorisation of BST. No such trials of BST are currently taking place in the UK or any other member state.

Any plans for other scientific research outside the terms of the moratorium are a matter for the pharmaceutical companies concerned. Such research could be conducted only under the terms of an animal test certificate issued by the Veterinary Medicines Directorate, or a Home Office licence.

Abattoir Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking both domestically and in Europe to assist the British abattoir industry; and what steps he is taking to increase business for that industry. [16656]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 February 1996]: MAFF Ministers support and encourage the work of British abattoirs through frequent trade visits to promote British meat both here and abroad. For example, I recently visited trade fairs in Cologne and Milan, and plan to visit the Paris fair next week.

On the export front, we continue to work to open up world markets closed to British meat because of unjustified public or animal health concerns. MAFF also encourages good applications for export initiatives to come forward under our marketing development scheme.

Domestically, for small abattoirs, the UK was instrumental in obtaining less onerous structural requirements and increase in the throughput limits from 12 to 20 livestock units per week under the single market fresh meat directive. More recently, the Government set up the Meat Hygiene Service, which has since April 1995 provided a more consistent, cost-effective inspection service to abattoirs than was possible under the previous local authority arrangements.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what safeguards will exist to ensure that a successful bidder for the administration of the teachers' superannuation scheme does not use the names of contributors for direct marketing purposes. [15071]

Mr. Robin Squire: The statement of service requirements which will form part of any contract that we decide to let for the administration of the teachers' superannuation scheme contains the following condition: that the contractor must not use, or allow anyone else to use, any of the information to which he has access through the contract for the purpose of selling other services or products such as personal financial planning, or for any purpose other than administering the TSS.

Skills Centres

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the sites formerly used as skills centres have so far been sold by the Skills Training Agency; and how much has been received in total for the sites sold. [15082]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 13 February 1996]: The Skills Training Agency was established as a self-contained agency of the former Department of Employment in 1985. It was transferred into the private sector in 1990. In May 1990 the Government completed the sale of 36 skills centre businesses with associated freehold property interests. Professional advisers were appointed to assist the Department with the disposal of the residual property interests.

Since May 1990, 15 of the residual sites have been either sold or surrendered to landlords. These were in:

Leicester, Chesterfield, East Lancs, Chelmsford, Leeds, Wakefield, Edinburgh, Southampton, Slough, Reading, Twickenham, Portsmouth, St. Helens, Cardiff, Deptford.

Where an outright sale could not be affected, despite prolonged marketing, properties were offered for subletting. Five properties are currently sublet, wholly or in part.

The total amount received for sales and leases is £14,731,372.

Access to Work Scheme

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the bodies from which she has received representations in respect of the reduction in the budget of the access to work scheme. [15333]

Mr. Paice: A number of letters have been received about the access to work budget. Additional funds have been allocated to this year's budget and planned provision for 1996–97 has been maintained at £12.9 million.

Travellers and Displaced Persons

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the total amount under section 210 grant for travellers and displaced persons in each year since 1990–91, (a) allocated and (b) paid out to local education authorities under the Education Reform Act 1988. [16462]

Mr. Robin Squire: Total amounts of grant allocated and spent in each of the years in question are as follows:

Year	Supply estimate £	Amount spent £
1990–91	6,068,000	5,387,405
1991–92	7,199,000	6,542,623
1992–93	7,419,000	7,530,497
1993–94	7,644,000	7,584,642
1994–95	7,867,000	7,802,941
1995–96	7,197,000	[1]—

[1] Not yet available.

The figures are for England only. Any underspending in particular years is due to local education authorities failing to take up their available grant allocations in full.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the projected total amount payable to local education authorities in 1996–97 as section 210 grant for travellers and displaced persons, under the Education Reform Act 1988; and what percentage this represents of the grant paid in (a) 1990–91 and (b) 1995–96. [16463]

Mr. Squire: The projected total amount of grant payable under this programme to local authorities in 1996–97 is £6,762,000, subject to parliamentary approval of the estimates. This represents a 25 per cent. increase on the grant paid in 1990–91 and 94 per cent. of the total grant allocated in 1995–96.

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to supplement the section 210 grant under the Education

Reform Act 1988 for travellers and displaced persons; and what changes in weighting of the selection 210 grant for travellers and displaced persons have been affected since 1990–91. [16461]

Mr. Squire: The financial support provided under this programme, over and above basic educational funding, is pitched at a level which the Government regard as realistic and appropriate. Grant recipients are free to provide supplementary funding of their own, if they deem this a particular local priority. The grant rate in England was set at 75 per cent. in 1990–91. It was reduced to 65 per cent. from 1 April 1995, bringing it more into line with other specific grant programmes.

Further Education Funding Council

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to allow private companies to bid for FEFC funding. [16406]

Mr. Paice: The Further and Higher Education Act 1992 already allows private companies to obtain funding from the Further Education Funding Council, provided that they are sponsored by an institution within the further education sector. The Government plan to legislate to remove the sponsorship requirements.

Schools (Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what assessment she has made of the full cost of bringing all schools in Staffordshire up to acceptable standards of repair and maintenance; [16298]

(2) what assessment has been made, and by whom, of the current state and condition of existing schools and equipment in Staffordshire; [16279]

(3) which bodies currently have responsibility for ensuring that school buildings and equipment in Staffordshire are kept and maintained in a proper state of repair; [16278]

(4) what information she has collated in respect of each school in Staffordshire as to the outstanding repairs to buildings and equipment necessary to ensure compliance with health and safety regulations. [16280]

Mrs. Gillan: Local authorities and school governors are responsible for the upkeep of their schools.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list all deregulation measures relating to schools in Staffordshire; and if she will make a statement on their impact. [16297]

Mr. Forth: The Department is currently taking the following deregulatory measures, which relate to all maintained schools:

the Education (Length of School Day) Deregulation Order 1996, now before Parliament; and the proposed new school premises regulations.

The deregulation order will help speed up the process by which schools may alter the length of their school day. The proposed new school premises regulations will abolish statutory minimum area standards for teaching space and playgrounds giving local authorities and school governors greater flexibility in building management.

In addition, the Department is working to relieve the administrative burdens on schools caused by the volume and frequency of communications from central Government and their agencies.

Employment Schemes

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list by region (a) the number of people taking part in the (i) jobplan, (ii) restart and (iii) workwise schemes, (b) the budgets for (i) to (iii), (c) the number and percentage of people who found jobs immediately on completion of (i) to (iii), (d) the number and percentage of people who become unemployed and in receipt of benefit after taking part in (i) to (iii) and (e) the number and percentage of people who become unemployed and are unable to claim benefit after taking part in (i) to (iii) for the last year for which figures are available. [16713]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 26 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about Jobplan, Restart and Workwise schemes.

These programmes aim to help people who have been unemployed for some time to compete successfully for jobs and opportunities. About 80% of people who become unemployed leave the unemployment register within a year. Those who remain can lose confidence and believe there are few options open to them. These programmes provide a stepping stone towards employment for people at greatest disadvantage in the labour market. It is important that after a long period of unemployment people take time to have a fresh look at their situation and assess their strengths and skills. After 12 months of unemployment people are asked to attend Jobplan, or Workwise if they are aged 18 to 24, unless they take up a place on another Department for Education and Employment (DfEE) programme. Workwise is a new programme which was piloted in 1994/95 and introduced nationally in April 1995/96. The course lasts for four weeks and helps young people to relaunch and refocus their job search.

Restart Courses are for people who have been unemployed for two years or more. Many of the clients who attend will face very severe difficulties in finding work and so there is a strong emphasis on looking at employers' needs and how clients can 'sell' their strengths and abilities. As a result, clients are then better able to apply for job vacancies, or to select another suitable option which will help them progress towards getting back into work.

The number of people who started on Jobplan and Restart Courses during 1994/95 and the expenditure on these programmes, by region, is shown in the tables attached. Information on Workwise is currently being collected but as yet a full year's figures are not available.

Separate details of the numbers going into work were not routinely collected until 1995/96. However, I have instead supplied information on all positive outcomes achieved by Jobplan and Restart Courses during 1994/95. This includes entry into DfEE programmes such as Jobclub and Training for Work as well as job outcomes. Positive outcomes are counted within 13 weeks of participants completing the programme.

Clients remain on the unemployment register and in receipt of benefit during the time they spend on these programmes. Therefore there is no break in their claim as a result of attending and those who do not take up a job or leave the register for another option continue to be unemployed.

I hope this is helpful.

Awarding Bodies

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the cost to her Department of each of the different awarding bodies. [16413]

Mr. Paice: The main examining and awarding bodies are independent commercial organisations that do not rely on grant in aid from the Department for their normal course of business.

School Premises Regulations 1981

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those local education authorities which responded (a) favourably and (b) unfavourably to proposals in her Department's consultation document issued in August 1995 to abolish the School Premises Regulations 1981. [16834]

Mrs. Gillan: The consultation document issued in July 1995 proposed replacing the Education (School Premises) Regulations with new, revised regulations.

Of the 49 local education authorities that responded during the consultation exercise, the following responded favourably to the proposal that the current school premises regulations should be revised: Barking and Dagenham, Barnet, Doncaster, East Sussex, Enfield, Hammersmith and Fulham, Hounslow, Knowsley, Solihull, Somerset, Stockport, Suffolk, Trafford, Wandsworth and Warwickshire.

The following authorities responded unfavourably to the proposal that the current regulations should be revised: Kent, Harrow and Sutton.

School Inspectors

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what estimate she has made of the number of lay inspectors of schools who have not yet participated in a school inspection; [16910]

(2) how much is being spent in 1995–96 on further training of lay inspectors; and if she will make a statement; [16912]

(3) how many lay inspectors have been used in inspections in private schools in the last year. [16911]

Mr. Robin Squire: These are matters for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools,who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Literacy Levels

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy to collect information on literacy levels on the basis of the definitions in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development report, "Literacy, Economy and Society"; and if she will make a statement. [16904]

Mr. Paice: Yes.

The OECD report covers literacy levels for countries which took part in the first stage of the international adult literacy survey. The UK is taking part in the second stage. The Department is helping to fund the survey of UK literacy levels by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. This uses the same definitions as the first stage.

School Sports Fields (Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the value of the land sold by local authorities in the Greater Manchester area formerly used as school sports fields. [17037]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is not held centrally.

Schools (Administrative Burden)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Government set up an official inquiry into the administrative burden on schools; when she expects it to report; who was on the official inquiry; what were its terms of reference; what was the cost of setting up the inquiry; and when she expects to act on the areas for action which the inquiry team highlights.[15617]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend commissioned the efficiency scrutiny into the administrative burden on schools in December 1994. The report was published on 31 July 1995.

There were four full-time members of the scrutiny team, who were departmental officials, and three part-time members; two head teachers and one Her Majesty's inspector.

The terms of reference were:

To report on, and make recommendations about, the scope to reduce and minimise the burden of bureaucracy on schools. In particular to consider:

the cumulative administrative burden of all communication with schools by Government and related bodies; likely future trends in this burden given current policies;

the potential benefits for reducing administrative burdens of action to improve internal control mechanisms;

the scope for improving the nature, format and timing of communications with schools by DFE and other centrally sponsored bodies so as to minimise the administrative burden.

The cost of the scrutiny was £100,000. Copies of the report are in the Library.

Action in response to most of the recommendations is already in progress. The Department has established a "Gatekeeper" team to control and reduce the overall flow of communications from the DFEE and related bodies to schools. The team has issued—to DFEE staff and others—guidance on communicating with schools, and has set up an advisory group of heads, teachers and governors to give "customer feedback" on DFEE communications.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many different types of Government audits each TEC has undergone in the Greater London area. [16439]

Mr. Paice: During the 12 months ending 20 February 1996, London TECs have participated in the following audits:

AZTEC:
Two financial controls audits; one PRF audit; one quality and health and safety audit.

CENTEC:
Two financial controls audits; one PRF audit; one quality and health and safety audit; one European Social Fund Audit.

CILNTEC:
One financial controls audit; one PRF audit; one quality and health and safety audit.

LETEC:
Two financial control audits; one PRF audit; one quality and health and safety audit.

NLTEC:
One financial controls audit; one PRF audit; one quality and health and safety audit.

NWLTEC:
Two financial controls audits; one PRF audit; one quality and health and safety audit.

SOLOTEC:
One financial controls audit; one PRF audit; one quality and health and safety audit.

"Jobs: How the UK Compares"

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many copies of "Jobs: How the UK Compares" were printed; how many were distributed and to whom; and what was (a) the cost of printing, (b) the cost of distribution and (c) the total cost. [16440]

Mr. Forth: Seven thousand five hundred copies of "Jobs: How the UK Compares" were printed.

So far, 3,000 copies have been distributed to the United Kingdom embassies of European Union countries, the European Commission, all Members of Parliament, all British Members of the European Parliament, training and enterprise councils; major British companies, and other Government Departments.

Production costs were £5,050 and distribution added around £500, giving a total of £5,550.

Head Teachers (Salaries)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many grant-maintained schools fall into each of the school teachers' pay and conditions document groups 1 to 6; and, in each case, how many of the head teachers' salaries fall into each pay spine point in the scale in the last year for which figures are available. [17027]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows the head teachers of grant-maintained schools in England and Wales identified in the Teachers Pensions Agency database of teachers' records on a spine point of at least the minimum for the appropriate school group.

Nursery Inspectors

Mr Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 441, (1) what are the chief inspector's general criteria relating to suitability for nursery inspectors; [17422]

(2) if vetting by the police will be included in the general criteria relating to the suitability of funded nursery education inspectors. [17421]

Mr. Robin Squire: Subject to parliamentary approval, schedule 1 to the Nursery Education and Grant-Maintained Schools Bill sets out general criteria for the registration of nursery education inspectors, including that they be fit and proper persons for this task. I expect the chief inspector will use procedures along the lines of those for registration of inspectors under the Education (Schools) Act 1992.

Training (Expenditure)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total Government expenditure on (a) direct training services, (b) local initiative funds, (c) the old job training scheme, (d) youth training including youth credits and (e) the youth training scheme in each year of their existence since 1971–72. [17460]

Mr. Paice: The information requested is contained in the following tables

Direct Training Services[1]

Year[2]	Expenditure £ Million
1971–72	22.7
1972–73	35.5
1973–74	49.7
1974–75	58.2
1975–76	118.6
1976–77	183.5
1977–78	197.1
1978–79	208.9
1979–80	229.4
1980–81	246.3
1981–82	235.1

[1] The figures for direct training services include expenditure for the TOPS programme which cannot now be disaggregated.

[2] Expenditure on training, education and enterprise programmes and administrative cost up to and including 1990–91 is for Great Britain. Expenditure in 1991–92 is for England and Wales and expenditure from 1992–93 is for England only.

Local Initiatives Fund

Year[1]	Expenditure £ million
1990–91	9.9
1991–92	48.2
1992–93	49.7

[1] Expenditure on training, education and enterprise programmes and administrative costs up to and including 1990–91 is for Great Britain. Expenditure in 1991–92 is for England and Wales and expenditure from 1992–93 is for England only.

Schoolchildren (Permanent Exclusions)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schoolchildren were excluded permanently from schools in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands in 1995. [17122]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available centrally.

The Department is collecting figures on permanent exclusions in the school year 1994–95, through the annual census returns sent to all schools in January. Data should be available by the early autumn.

Young People (Full-time Education)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people aged between 16 and 18 years in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands are in full-time education; and if she will give the figure (i) in real terms and (ii) as a percentage of the total number of 16 to 18-year-olds in (a) and (b). [17123]

Mr. Paice: Information is available for young people aged 16 and 17 only, and is shown in the following table. The figures relate to the 1993–94 academic year.

	16-year-olds		17 year-olds
	Number in full-time education	Percentage of population[1]	Number in full-time education	Percentage of population[1]
Coventry	2,400	70	1,900	49
West Midlands	42,000	70	34,400	55

[1] Figures are based on the total population for each relevant age group.

Nene College

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects Nene college to achieve university status. [17132]

Mr. Forth: Nene college does not at present meet the criteria for university status. It is not possible to predict when it will do so.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Stormont (Office Facilities)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which political parties have office facilities in the Stormont estate; what is the budgeted cost for these facilities; to what extent officers of those parties may work for the Government of the Republic of Ireland; and if he will list those bodies contributing to the cost. [15194]

Mr. Ancram: Conferencing facilities at Castle buildings have been made available to all of the relevant Northern Ireland parties and the Irish Government, solely for the purposes of the preparatory talks process. To date only four parties—the Alliance party, the Workers party, the Progressive Unionist party and the Ulster Democratic party—have availed themselves of the facilities, although other parties have attended meetings in the building.

The accommodation is part of the existing Government estate. The additional costs incurred in providing conferencing facilities average approximately £1,900 per month. The staff costs incurred in January were approximately £1,500. From 1 February 1996 staff costs are expected to amount to a total of approximately £4,000 per month.

These costs are being met entirely by my Department as appropriate expenditure in the search for a comprehensive political settlement.

Linen Industry

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions have been held with the Directorate of the Killyleagh, Rathfriland and Rostrevor spinning mills concerning the future of the linen industry; and what action he plans to take to assist these spinning mills. [15712]

Mr. Ancram: There has been a sharp downturn in world demand for linen yarn over the last eight months. Killyleagh Yarns, other linen yarn spinners in Northern Ireland and producers in other European countries have found it necessary to curtail production. The Industrial Development Board is in regular contact with spinners in Northern Ireland. Northern Ireland spinning businesses have available to them and are using a range of marketing and trade development schemes administered by the Industrial Development Board.

Fair Employment Legislation

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps will be taken to incorporate the policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines for the public service into the fair employment legislation. [15713]

Mr. Ancram: The policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines have been issued as administrative guidance for Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office. There are no proposals to incorporate these guidelines in legislation.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employers with more than 25 workers have not complied with requirements in respect of the submission of reviews for the Fair Employment Act 1976 in each year from 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1995. [15709]

Mr. Ancram: There is no requirement on employers with 25 or more employees to submit to the commission reviews under either the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976 or the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989.

Targeting Social Need Initiative

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what resources will be allocated to Government departments in order to implement the strategic plan for the targeting social need initiative. [15707]

Mr. Ancram: Many departmental spending programmes already contribute to the targeting social need initiative and departments are encouraged to direct existing resources in relevant programmes, as far as possible, to areas and people in greatest need. Planned spending over the survey period 1996–99 on making Belfast work and Londonderry initiatives remains substantial and additional funds are being made available for a major hospital redevelopment project in west Belfast. The Government's contribution to the new European Union special programme for peace and reconciliation will also have a positive TSN impact.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to ensure that the Departments of (a) Agriculture, (b) Environment, (c) Economic Development and (d) Finance and Personnel publish a targeting social need strategic plan. [15708]

Mr. Ancram: All Departments take TSN principles into account in drawing up policies and determined expenditure priorities, but it is for each to decide, in the light of its particular responsibilities, whether it is necessary to develop a strategic plan and, if so, whether to publish it.

Social Deprivation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the council areas in Northern Ireland by degree of social deprivation. [15770]

Sir John Wheeler: A list of council areas in Northern Ireland by degree of deprivation has been published by the Department of Finance and Personnel in a policy planning and research unit occasional paper, No. 28 of September 1994, entitled "Relative Deprivation in Northern Ireland". Copies of this report have been deposited in the House of Commons and House of Lords Libraries.

Water Supply Pipes

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) percentage and (b) mileage of water main supplies pipes in Northern Ireland are made from asbestos cement. [16033]

Mr. Moss: It is estimated that approximately 11 per cent., or 1,400 miles, of water mains in Northern Ireland are made from asbestos cement.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provision under the citizens charter. [16020]

Sir John Wheeler: The remit of the Parliamentary Commissioner does not extend to executive non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration investigates complaints of alleged injustice as a consequence of maladministration by Northern Ireland Departments, including their agencies, while the function of the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints investigates similar complaints against local and public bodies.

The current list of executive non-departmental public bodies which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints is as follows:

Agricultural Research Institute of Northern Ireland
Arts Council of Northern Ireland
Construction Industry Board
Council of Catholic Maintained Schools
Education and Library Boards
Enterprise Ulster
Fire Authority for Northern Ireland
Fisheries Conservancy Board
Labour Relations Agency
Langanside Corporation
Livestock and Meat Commission
Local Enterprise Development Unit
Mental Health Commission for Northern Ireland
National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland

Northern Ireland Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action

Northern Ireland Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members

Northern Ireland Housing Executive

Northern Ireland Local Government Officers' Superannuation Committee

Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment

Northern Ireland Museums Council

Northern Ireland Tourist Board

Trustees of the Ulster Folk and transport Museum

Trustees of the Ulster Museum

Youth Council for Northern Ireland.

There are no executive non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland that are subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission.

The following executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Northern Ireland Office are subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office.

Police Authority for Northern Ireland

Probation Board for Northern Ireland

Independent Commissioner for Police Complaints

Training School Management Board Rathgael and Whiteabbey.

The responsibility for the National Audit Office does not extend to the six Northern Ireland Departments, which have their own similarly appointed body—the Northern Ireland Audit Office. The following executive non-departmental public bodies are subject to scrutiny by the NIAO:

Agricultural Research Institute of Northern Ireland

Education and Library Boards

Enterprise Ulster

Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland

Fair Employment Commission for Northern Ireland

Fire Authority for Northern Ireland

General Consumer Council for Northern Ireland

Labour Relations Agency

Local Enterprise Development Unit

Mental Health Commission for Northern Ireland

National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland

Northern Ireland Commissioner for Protection Against Unlawful Industrial Action

Northern Ireland Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members

Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum Examinations and Assessment

Northern Ireland Fishery Harbour Authority

Northern Ireland Housing Executive

Northern Ireland Tourist Board

Sports Council for Northern Ireland

Staff Commission for Education and Library Boards

Ulster Folk and Transport Museum

Ulster Museum

Youth Council for Northern Ireland.

The executive non-departmental public bodies that are subject to the statutory provisions for open government are those bodies listed as under the jurisdiction of the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints.

All executive non-departmental public bodies listed in the publication "Public Bodies 1995" are subject to performance indicators and the provisions under the citizens charter. A copy of "Public Bodies 1995" is available in the Library.

Transfer Examinations

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what analysis has been made of the questions used in the transfer examinations to determine whether either gender has been advantaged by the type of questions on the examination papers. [16254]

Mr. Ancram: The questions used in the tests are trialled to seek to ensure that they are free of bias in relation to any factor, including gender. My Department is, however, commissioning an analysis of the responses of pupils to the 1995–96 transfer test.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96 the total number of children involved in transfer procedure; how many were (i) boys and (ii) girls; which grades were obtained; what was the percentage of total entrants awarded each grade; and what was the percentage variation between boys and girls. [16253]

Mr. Ancram: The numbers of pupils transferring from primary to secondary education in the years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96, analysed by gender, are shown in Table 1:

Action for Community Employment

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present basic wage payable to ACE workers; what has been the basic wage in each year since the ACE scheme became operational; and if he will make a statement on the long-term future of the ACE programme. [16249]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 23 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your questions about the Action for Community Employment Programme (ACE).

The Training and Employment Agency does not pay ACE workers a basic wage. Sponsoring organisations receive a grant of £93 per week for each ACE worker employed. Up to £11 of this grant can be used by the sponsor to defray overhead expenses. The balance must be used as a contribution towards paying the local rate for the job being undertaken by the ACE employee. Any shortfall between the grant and the local rate must be met by the sponsor.

I feel sure you will understand therefore that it is not possible to provide details of the basic wage paid to ACE workers since the scheme became operational.

You asked also about the long term future of the ACE programme. During 1996 the Agency will undertake an in depth review of the needs of the long term unemployed which will inform the Agency about the programmes and services we currently offer. ACE will, of course, be included in the review and its future and shape will depend upon the outcome.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16532]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding reply 22 February 1996]: No member of my Department saw the report before it was presented to the House.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16499]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Between 3.30pm and 4.00pm on Thursday 15 February 1996.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16585]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 22 February 1996]: On Thursday 15 February 1996, after 3.30pm.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16488]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 22 February 1996]: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the policy of the Prison Service in relation to applications for prison transfers to prisons in the country of origin of the applicant. [16233]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Prisons Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 26 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your parliamentary question regarding Prison Service policy in respect of repatriation of prisoners.

The repatriation of prisoners to and from the United Kingdom is governed by the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984. Repatriation may be considered where the country to which application is being made is a signatory to the Council of Europe Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Persons or to the Commonwealth Scheme for the Transfer of Convicted Offenders or has a bilateral agreement with the United Kingdom.

To be eligible for repatriation a prisoner must have received his final sentence for an offence which must be a criminal offence under the law of the receiving country, by a national of that country or have close family ties there and as a general rule have at least 6 months of his sentence to serve at the time of application. Repatriation requires the consent of both jurisdictions and the prisoner concerned. In considering whether to consent to a repatriation request it has been the policy of Her Majesty's Government not to agree to a transfer where such a move would result in a substantial reduction in time left to serve.

WALES

NHS Patients (Private Sector Care)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of NHS funding is now used to buy care in the private sector. [15759]

Mr. Richards: The annual accounts submitted by health authorities and GP fundholders for 1994–95 show that 1 per cent. of expenditure by health authorities and GP fundholders was used to purchase care in the private sector.

Modern Apprenticeship Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost in Wales of the advertising campaign to promote the modern apprenticeship scheme. [15761]

Mr. Richards: The modern apprenticeship scheme has been promoted as part of the Department for Education and Employment-funded "Free your Potential" advertising campaign. To date, the Welsh Office has contributed £53,000 for Welsh language press advertising and the provision of information and materials in Welsh.

The Welsh Office is also contributing £68,383 towards a marketing campaign organised by the training and enterprise councils in Wales to promote modern and accelerated modern apprenticeships to young people and employers.

Care in the Community

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidelines he has issued about the provision of care to elderly people living in the community. [15758]

Mr. Richards: The White Paper "Caring for People", Cm 849, and the NHS and Community Care Act 1990 set the policy and legislative framework for community care.

In addition, the Welsh Office has issued policy guidance to local authorities and the NHS in Wales in respect of their responsibilities for planning, commissioning and providing services in the community. The main areas covered include social care planning, assessment and care management and NHS responsibilities for meeting continuing health care needs, complaints procedures and inspection units.

Council Tax

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce provision to enable payments of council tax to be made in 12 monthly instalments. [16060]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. Billing authorities can establish annual, biannual, weekly or up to 10 monthly instalment payment regimes for council tax.

Empty Dwellings

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many empty dwellings owned by Government Departments there were in 1995 in Alyn and Deeside. [15762]

Mr. Hague: On 1 April 1995, the Welsh Office had 13 empty dwellings in Alyn and Deeside and the Ministry of Defence had 62 dwellings—40 of which were inside the perimeter of RAF Sealand and unable to be let.

Disability

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals between the ages of 16 and 18 years who (a) are disabled and (b) have learning difficulties are currently in (i) full-time education, (ii) Government-funded training courses, (iii) employment, (iv) none of (i) to (iii), (1) in Wales and (2) in each country. [16187]

Mr. Richards: Information is available on a county basis for those with special needs in full-time education and is as follows:

Full-time education

	Pupils aged 16 and over with a statement of special needs (January 1995)	Students aged 16 to 18 with Special Education needs at Further Education Institutions (November 1994)
Clwyd	149	39
Dyfed	102	7
Gwent	107	99
Gwynedd	33	19
Mid Glamorgan	91	139
Powys	18	12
South Glamorgan	71	39
West Glamorgan	62	70
Wales	633	424

LEA STATS2 return; FESR.

In addition, in December 1994, 43 students aged 16 to 18 on full-time courses at higher education institutions in Wales were recorded as having a disability.

For Government training schemes, information is not available on a county basis. In 1994–95, 3 per cent. of those starting on youth training or youth credits in Wales had a disability or a health problem.

Information on the number of young people with disabilities or learning difficulties in employment or in the population as a whole, is not available.

Breast Cancer Services

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he monitors the effectiveness of the breast cancer screening programme in Wales. [16626]

Mr. Richards: The NHS breast screening programme, carried out in Wales by Breast Test Wales, is part of a 10-year UK evaluation to determine the contribution of screening in reducing the mortality rate from breast cancer. It commenced in 1989 and is scheduled for completion in 1999. Evaluation of its success is a continuous process monitored by the UK co-ordinating office with contributions from Breast Test Wales. Additionally, breast Test Wales activities are the subject of annual review by the Department.

Neath Hospital (Obstetrics Service)

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what remaining obstacles exist to agreeing the proposal by West Glamorgan health authority to retain a full on-site consultant-led obstetrics service at Neath hospital and its planned successor. [16333]

Mr. Richards: There are a number of issues relating mainly to clinical safety that are being addressed by the chairman designate of the Morgannwg health authority and his team.

They have been asked to come forward in early March with firm proposals for the provision of maternity services.

Business Contact Service

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what considerations led him to require a charge to be paid by business people using the business contact service; what plans he has for introducing a freephone service for business people in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [15881]

Mr. Hague: Quality of service, cost-effectiveness and ease of access to the local network of business information and advisory services were the main considerations behind the decision to adopt the 0345 local call rate system for business connect. This all-Wales service was launched in January and its operation will be kept under review.

Water Levels

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Wales region of the National Rivers Authority and Welsh Water-Dwr Cymru as regards the authority's warning on reservoir levels in north Wales, and if he will make a statement. [17080]

Mr. Hague: None. Throughout the past 12 months, both Dwr Cymru and the National Rivers Authority—Welsh region have kept my officials fully informed of reservoir levels throughout Wales and the remedial measures required to safeguard water supplies.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposed departmental staff reductions on the auditing of expenditure of grant-maintained schools. [17082]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office does not undertake the external audit of grant-maintained schools. It is the responsibility of the governing body of each grant-maintained school to ensure that its accounts are audited annually by external auditors appointed under arrangements laid down by the Secretary of State.

Departmental Staff Reductions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of the proposed staff reductions on the target times for processing (i) agricultural grant applications, (ii) industrial assistance grants made the Industry Act 1972, (iii) export advice and (iv) miscellaneous inquiries; [17081]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of his proposed departmental staff reductions on the processing of complaints by (a) members of the public and (b) hon. Members of Parliament in terms of target times for responses. [17079]

Mr. Hague: The running cost reductions in the Welsh Office, which are broadly in line with most other Departments, reflect the Government's firm commitment to control public expenditure.

My Department is currently working through the full implications of the planned staffing reductions, with a view to ensuring that it will continue to provide high quality services at minimum cost to the taxpayer.

Powered Wheelchairs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what expenditure has been incurred by health authorities in Wales for the purchase of electrically powered indoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years; [17013]

(2) how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor wheelchairs by health authorities in each of the last three years; [17193]

(3) what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor wheelchair. [17190]

Mr. Richards: Responsibility for the supply of electrically powered indoor wheelchairs in Wales rests with the artificial limb and appliance service, which is managed by the Welsh health common services authority under its chief executive Nigel Kirk. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair; [17000]

(2) how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs by health authorities in each of the last three years; [17011]

(3) what expenditure has been incurred by health authorities in Wales for the purchase of electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years. [17187]

Mr. Richards: The provision of indoor/outdoor powered wheelchairs in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grant-maintained (a) primary and (b) secondary schools fall into each of the school teachers' pay and conditions document school groups; and, in each case, how many head teachers' salaries fall into each pay spine point on the scale in the last year for which figures are available. [17345]

Mr. Richards: The table shows the head teachers of grant-maintained schools in England and Wales identified in the Teacher's Pensions Agency database of teachers' records on a spine point of at least the minimum for the appropriate school group. Separate figures for primary and secondary schools and for Wales are not shown because detailed information for such a small number of individuals within certain school groups could disclose individual head teachers's salary details.

SCOTLAND

Court Service

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many trials there were in the district court during 1995; and if he will indicate the total number of adjournments of trials in the district court, the reason for these adjournments, and if they were at the instance of the prosecution or the defence. [15862]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Using information provided by procurator fiscal offices, in 1995 there were 5,451 trials in district courts of which 899 were before a stipendiary magistrate court. Information is not collected centrally on adjournments at district courts.

Prisoners (Health)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many prisoners in prisons in Scotland are currently known to be terminally ill; and what information is available as to the cause of the terminal illnesses; [16697]

(2) what provision is available to prisoners in Scotland for therapeutic and psychological follow up in the case of positive results in tests for transmissible diseases; [16688]

(3) how many nurses and doctors are employed in the prison service in Scotland per 100 inmates; [16686]

(4) what steps are taken to prevent discrimination against prisoners in Scotland with specific health problems; [16699]

(5) what specific provisions are made for those prisoners in Scotland known to be terminally ill; [16698]

(6) what regular medical checks prisoners in prison in Scotland receive; and what systematic checks are carried out for transmissible diseases; [16685]

(7) what policies the prison service in Scotland has concerning the prevention of transmissible or contagious diseases (a) in general and (b) in respect of specific outbreaks; [16681]

(8) what percentage of the total annual budget for prisons in Scotland is designated for health care: [16700]

(9) what steps are taken to ensure the confidentiality of medical checks on prisoners in Scotland, including where a case of a transmissible disease is identified; [16687]

(10) how many prisoners died in prison in Scotland in each year since 1992; and of these deaths how many were (a) self-inflicted, (b) accidental, (c) homicides, (d) due to disease, (e) due to AIDS, (f) due to tuberculosis, (g) due to cancer and (h) due to vascular and heart disease. [16683]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the questions relate to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 26 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your questions about health matters in Scottish Prisons.

The Scottish Prison Service has since the mid-1980s encouraged prisoners, where appropriate, to undergo testing for transmissible diseases such as HIV and Hepatitis. Where appropriate, prisoners are also encouraged to have tests for other transmissible conditions such as venereal disease. In all cases arrangements are made to ensure that the prisoner understands the purpose of the test prior to its being undertaken. Prisoners are offered psychological counselling and support when the result becomes available if they so desire. Those who do test positive for diseases which require treatment are then encouraged to undergo regular health checks in order that any deterioration in their physical and mental well-being is minimised. Where appropriate such monitoring is carried out within the prison setting but where necessary the prisoner may be sent to an appropriate facility within the NHS. The Scottish Prison Service has at no time pursued a policy of segregation for prisoners who have been found to be positive with HIV.

The Scottish Prison Service offers medical checks as appropriate to prisoners for a variety of conditions including coronary vascular disease, asthma and diabetes. Appropriate measures are taken to minimise the risk of spread of HIV and Hepatitis by a variety of means including awareness counselling and the provision of bleach.

Health and hygiene measures are in place to prevent the spread of other diseases. In any instance where there is an outbreak of transmissible disease the Service's Medical Adviser initiates extra measures to provide support to staff and prisoners. All steps are taken to ensure medical confidentiality and no information is imparted to any third party without the prisoner's permission.

Records are not kept centrally of the number of prisoners who are terminally ill. For those prisoners who are in the terminal stage of an illness Section 3(1) of the Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 makes provision for the Secretary of State to grant early release on compassionate grounds.

SPS policy is to deliver a standard of primary care equal to that which an individual receives in the community. Just over 3% of the total Scottish Prison Service total annual budget is devoted to health care. Medical officers in Scottish prisons are usually general practitioners appointed part-time. There are at present 3 full-time medical officers and provision for 28 part-time medical officers. In addition, we have 142 nursing staff, including nursing managers, clinical supervisors, practitioner nurses and a small number of health care assistants. This is equivalent to approximately 2.5 nursing staff per 100 prisoners. Because the medical staff are part-time and offer variable numbers of hours in their contracts each month, it is not practical to calculate a ratio of doctors to prisoners.

Finally, the information you asked for on prisoner deaths in Scotland in each year since 1992 and the causes is as follows:

	1992	1993	1994	1995
Self-inflicted	9	5	16	10
Accidental (including overdoses)	—	2	2	—
AIDS/HIV	—	—	1	1
TB	—	—	—	—
Cancer	—	—	—	1
Vascular/Heart Disease	2	1	3	1

Cairngorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost to public funds per job for the proposed funicular railway development on the Cairngorm plateau. [16267]

Mr. Kynoch: The amount of public funds which might be made available for the proposed construction of a funicular railway in the Cairngorms area have yet to be determined.

Census Data

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the 1991 census data will be available on the basis of the new parliamentary constituencies in Scotland. [16457]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On current plans, 1991 census data for the new parliamentary constituencies will be available in September 1996.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16584]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1996]: When it was presented to the House of Commons.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16498]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1996]: During the morning of Friday 16 February 1996.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16533]

Mr. Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1996]: No one in my Department saw the report before it was presented to the House.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16489]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Thursday 22 February 1996, Official Report, column 239.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the total amount of national lottery awards by (a) English county, (b) Scottish region and (c) Welsh county to date. [15448]

Mr. Sproat: Figures for national lottery funds broken down by county areas are not currently available. The Department of National Heritage is currently developing a lottery database that will make these figures available.

A report on the distribution of national lottery proceeds is placed in the Library of the House each month, which includes a breakdown of awards made by region. The February edition will be placed in the Library of the House in early March.

British Library

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what date she agreed the report of the National Audit Office on the British Library. [16212]

Mr. Sproat: The Department's officials have been co-operating with the National Audit Office examination of the construction project. It is for the Comptroller and Auditor General to determine the date of publication and we understand that he expects to publish his report in the spring.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department which (a) have a statutory base, (b) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (c) hold open meetings for the public; and if in each case this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntarily. [16181]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 22 February 1996]: The information is as follows:

British library
British museum
British Tourist Authority
Broadcasting Complaints Commission
Broadcasting Standards Council
English Heritage
Football Licensing Authority
Imperial war museum
Millennium Commission
Museum of London
National gallery
National heritage memorial fund
National maritime museum
National museums and galleries on Merseyside
National portrait gallery
National museum of science and technology
Natural history museum
Public Lending Right Registrar
Royal armouries
Tate gallery
Victoria and Albert museum
Wallace collection

(b) None.

(c) None holds formal open board meetings for the public, although many engage in regular dialogue with, or arrange informal events for, members of the public to discuss matters of policy.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the total expenditure by her Department in 1994–95 on the Isle of Wight, broken down by category. [16773]

Mr. Sproat: My Department recorded expenditure of £395,020.84 on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95. This related to Osborne house convalescent home; the following table provides the available expenditure breakdown.

i. Payments to the Civil Servants Benevolent Fund:
Reimbursement of deficit	359,490.39
Furniture and equipment	35,000.00
ii. Payments to Medina Borough Council:
Council Tax	530.45

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to her office. [16492]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 February 1996]: During the afternoon of Friday 16 February 1996.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the members of her Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16521]

Mrs. Bottomley [holding answer 22 February 1996]: None.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16597]

Mrs. Bottomley [holding answer 22 February 1996]: On Thursday 15 February 1996.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which Ministers in her Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16485]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 22 February 1996]: None.

Television Licences

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage in what circumstances the owner of two households is required to purchase a television licence for only one property when a television is being used at both properties; and what is the estimated extra revenue that would be generated by making a television licence compulsory for every household where a television is used. [16064]

Mr. Sproat: A person may not instal or use a television set except under authority of a television licence, which is generally valid at the single place specified in the licence. However, there has been a practice whereby the Licensing Authority has permitted people owning second homes not to notify temporary changes of address when moving between those homes, and thus not to hold a second television licence, provided that they confirm that no use of television ever occurs simultaneously in both homes. This practice is currently under review by the BBC, which has responsibility for administration of the television licensing system and determination of licensing requirements in individual cases. We understand that the BBC hopes to be able to make an announcement shortly. No accurate figures are available for the number of second homes in which television is installed. However, there are approximately 38,000 second homes with television for which, by agreement with the licensing authority, no second licence is currently held. If a full colour television licence were to be taken out for each such home, this would raise about £3 million in extra revenue.

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when regulations will be laid to bring into effect the television licence fee increases from 1 April. [17728]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: On 14 December 1995, Official Report, column 753, my hon. Friend the Minister of State announced that, from 1 April 1996, the fee for a colour television licence would increase to £89.50 and that for a black and white licence to £30. The regulations necessary to bring these fees into force were laid before Parliament on Friday 23 February.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nurses and doctors are employed within the Prison Service per 100 inmates. [16702]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of nurses and doctors employed within the Prison Service per 100 inmates.

Information on the whole time equivalents of part time health care staff, which would alow an accurate comparison per 100 inmates, is not available centrally.

The available information is set out in the table below.

Numbers of full time and part time Health Care Staff (excluding Health Care Governors)

Staff	Number
Doctors	270
Nursing grades	600
Health Care Officers	1,037
Total	1,907

The prison population as at 21 February was 53,040.

Hertfordshire Probation and Bail Hostel

Mr. Garel-Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has received to the proposed closure of the Hertfordshire probation and bail hostel in Watford; how many letters have been received about the proposed closure and if he will list them; and how many and what proportion are (a) in favour of closure and (b) opposed. [16630]

Mr. Sackville: Representations have been received from five Members of Parliament, the chairman of Hertfordshire probation committee, the Bishop of Hertford, the Lord Lieutenant of Hertfordshire, the high sheriff of Hertfordshire, the chairmen of the North Hertfordshire, Watford and St. Albans benches; the secretary of the south-west Hertfordshire young homeless group, the right noble Lord Parkinson of Carnforth and his honour Judge Colston QC. All these representations were opposed to the closure of the hostel.

However, in view of the sub-standard condition of the hostel and the fact that, over the last year, it has on average been two-thirds occupied, my right hon. and learned Friend decided last month that the hostel should close shortly.

Prisoners (Deaths)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners died in prison in England and Wales in each year since 1992; and of these deaths how many were (a) self-inflicted, (b) accidental, (c) homicides, (d) due to disease, (e) due to AIDS, (f) due to tuberculosis, (g) due to cancer and (h) due to vascular and heart disease. [16682]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about deaths in prison custody in England and Wales since 1992.

The detailed information requested is not recorded centrally. The attached table gives the number of deaths for each year since 1992 broken down into self-inflicted, natural causes, accidental deaths and murders.

Cause of death	1992	1993	1994	1995
Self-inflicted	41	47	62	60
Natural causes	34	42	43	56
Accidental death	4	3	0	0
Murder	2	2	3	1
Total	81	94	108	117

Note:
These figures do not include deaths of prisoners which occurred outside of prison, for example on home leave or while unlawfully at large.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of suicides in prisons in England and Wales since 1 January. [16321]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the total number of suicides in prisons in England and Wales since 1 January.

There have been 11 self inflicted deaths between 1 January and 21 February 1996. No inquests have yet been held into any of these deaths.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of suicides in prisons in England and Wales during 1995. [16319]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the total number of suicides in prisons in England and Wales during 1995.

There were 60 self-inflicted deaths in 1995. Inquest verdicts were: suicide (27), open verdicts (6), accidental deaths (3) natural causes (1). Inquests are still awaited in 23 cases.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proposed prison budget for Wandsworth prison for 1996; and what it was for each year since 1990. [16244]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the budget allocations for Wandsworth prison between 1990 and 1996.

Prison Service budgets are allocated to prisons in financial years rather than in calendar years. The table below therefore gives details of the budgets for the financial years 1991–92 to 1996–97.

Financial year	Budget allocation £
1991–92	14,201,000
1992–93	16,303,220
1993–94	21,027,624
1994–95	21,201,390
1995–96	21,516,600
1996–97	20,353,000

[1] Proposed. It is not possible to provide a budget figure for 1990–91 as reliable records are not available for that year.

Prostitution

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated in England and Wales as to the age of young girls soliciting for prostitution on the public highway; what has been the location of each such survey; and if he will make a statement. [16255]

Mr. Maclean: As part of an evaluation of a multi-agency initiative to reduce prostitution in Streatham, south London, an analysis was carried out of the details held on police files about prostitutes operating in the area in 1989–90. The ages of the women ranged from 16 to 48 years. Twenty-seven per cent. of the prostitutes were aged under 20, 50 per cent. were between 20 and 30 and 23 per cent. were over 30. A copy of this study, by Roger Matthews, is available in the Library.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many girls between the ages of 14 and 17 years have been charged with soliciting for prostitution in each of the last five years in England and Wales. [16256]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the table:

The number of females aged 14 to17 prosecuted for offences of 'a common prostitute loitering or soliciting for the purpose of prostitution'[1]

England and Wales

	Number of females

[1] An offence under section 1 of the Street Offences Act 1959.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of (a) men and (b) women charged with and convicted of living on immoral earnings in England and Wales in each of the last five years; how many were sent to prison; and how many were fined. [16257]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is given in the table:

Wormwood Scrubs Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is to be the prison budget for Wormwood Scrubs prison for 1996; and what was it for each of the years 1990 to 1995. [16320]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about Wormwood Scrubs prison.

Prison Service budgets are allocated to prisons in financial years rather than in calendar years. The table below therefore gives details of budgets for the financial years 1991–92 to 1996–97.

1994–95	20,359,000
1995–96	19,801,000
1996–97	[1]20,132,000

[1] Proposed. It is not possible to provide a budget figure for 1990—91 as reliable records are not available for that year.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16012]

Mr. Howard: The answer is:

(a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration:

Commission for Racial Equality
Data Protection Registrar
Horserace Betting Levy Board

(b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission: none; the Audit Commission has responsibility only for local government;

(c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office:

Community Development Foundation
Commission for Racial Equality
Data Protection Registrar
Gaming Board for Great Britain
National Lottery Charities Board
Police Complaints Authority

(d) statutory provisions for open government: the following executive non-departmental public bodies are required by statute to publish annual reports:

Alcohol Education and Research Council
Commission for Racial Equality
Gaming Board for Great Britain
Horserace Betting Levy Board
Horserace Totalisator Board
National Lottery Charities Board
Data Protection Registrar
Police Complaints Authority

Those NDPBs that are subject to scrutiny by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are also subject to the code of practice on open government, and other NDPBs are being asked to develop codes of practice on similar lines.

(e) performance indicators: NDPBs are encouraged, wherever appropriate, to develop performance indicators and associated targets and to publish these.

(f) provisions under the citizen's charter: those executive NDPBs which offer a service to the public are encouraged to adopt the principles set out in the citizens charter and to publicise how these are being reflected in their working arrangements—for instance, the Commission for Racial Equality has published a statement and the Gaming Board has published customer service targets in its annual report.

Prison Service (Director General)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the position of the Director General of the Prison Service was advertised, when is the closing date for applications; and what is the number of applicants who have so far applied. [16043]

Mr. Howard: The position has not been advertised.

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to appoint a new Director General of the Prison Service. [16189]

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 5 December 1995 at column 204.

Prison Transfers

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many applications for prison transfers from prisons in (a) England and (b) Wales to (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) the Republic of Ireland and (iii) elsewhere are currently under consideration; and in each category how many applications have been (1) approved and (2) denied in each of the past 10 years; [16231]

(2) if he will approve outstanding prison transfer applications for Irish prisoners wishing to return to prisons in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Republic of Ireland. [16232]

Miss Widdecombe: England and Wales are treated as one jurisdiction and separate figures are not held. Repatriation to the Republic of Ireland was not possible until the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons came into force for the Republic on 1 November 1995. Information on applications received before this date is not recorded. Available information for the past 10 years is given in the table:

Transfer of prisoners from England and Wales

	Northern Ireland		Other United Kingdom and foreign jurisdictions
	Transferred	Refusal	Transferred	Refusal
1987	3	7	0	0
1988	9	8	41	15
1989	15	40	47	17
1990	13	36	42	13
1991	28	30	45	19
1992	20	24	56	16
1993	8	9	35	18
1994	21	16	27	40
1995	16	8	47	73

On 22 February, 25 requests for transfer to Northern Ireland, 69 requests for repatriation to the Republic of Ireland and 91 requests for transfer to other United Kingdom or foreign jurisdictions were under consideration. All outstanding requests will be determined on their individual merits. To date, no application for repatriation to the Republic of Ireland has been determined.

Fire Services

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to carry out investigations in relation to (a) backdraft, (b) flashover and (c) positive pressure ventilation with a view to increasing the safety of firefighters; and if he will make a statement. [16615]

(2) what investigations are currently being carried out in relation to (a) backdraft, (b) flashover and (c) positive pressure ventilation with a view to increasing the safety of firefighters. [16614]

Mr. Sackville: A Home Office fire research and development group study on flashover and backdraft was published in 1994. Following this research, a supplement to the manual of firemanship entitled "The Behaviour of Fire—Compartment Fires" was published in February 1995. The supplement provides advice and details on the potential for flashover and backdraft. Firefighting tactics most likely to avert or reduce any potential danger are also described.

A further supplement, "Ventilation of Buildings and Structures", is being drafted. This will provide information on the use of ventilation, including operational experience in the United States of America, set in a United Kingdom firefighting context.

A group of representatives of the professional bodies concerned with operational firefighting, including Her Majesty's fire service inspectorate, the Fire Brigades Union and the chief and assistant Chief Fire Officers' Association will be meeting soon to consider what further research, training or advice might be appropriate.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many fire appliances attended the blaze at Blue Anchor lane, Bermondsey, London SE16 on Tuesday 13 February; at what times the first appliance arrived and the last appliance left; how many appliances arrived within five minutes of being summoned, and how many arrived within 10 minutes of being summoned; from which stations appliances were sent; and how many firefighters attended; [15839]

(2) when the first firefighter reliefs were called out to attend the site of the IRA bombing on Friday 9 February; when the first firefighter reliefs arrived and when the firefighter reliefs left; and from which fire stations they were called out. [15840]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 19 February 1996]: The deployment of appliances is an operational matter for the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority. I would be grateful, therefore, if the hon. Member would contact the chief officer for the details that she seeks.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of information systems in the fire service. [16671]

Mr. Sackville: Fire brigades make much use of information systems, both operationally and for administrative purposes, but the extent of such use in particular brigade areas is a matter for each individual fire authority.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of incidents attended by the fire service in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [16673]

Mr. Sackville: The number of incidents attended by the fire service in England and Wales for 1989 to 1994 is given on page 23 of Cm 2998, "Report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services for England and Wales", presented to Parliament by my right hon. and learned Friend in October 1995 and available in the Library.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current operational assessment of the number of calls per year to be expected in each fire service area; in what year the assessments were last made; what was the actual number of calls received in each fire service area for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [16677]

Mr. Sackville: No such assessment has been made. The numbers of fire calls and fire false alarm calls attended by local authority fire brigades in 1993 are given on pages 162 and 52 respectively of the Home Office publication, "Fire Statistics—United Kingdom 1993", which is available in the Library.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning (a) fire service pensions, (b) fire service training, (c) fire service capital investment and (d) standards of fire service cover in the last year; and if he will make a statement. [16670]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of such representations during the past year. All these subjects have been considered.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what change to fire service recommended attendance standards are planned; and if he will make a statement. [16672]

Mr. Sackville: The nationally agreed standards of fire cover, which are expressed in terms of required attendance times, are under review by the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council. This is in line with a recommendation by the Audit Commission in its recent value for money study on the fire service.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all European Community directives which relate to fire services and fire safety measures, the dates they were implemented and the deadlines for implementation; and if he will outline the key requirements of any directive. [16657]

Mr. Sackville: Information regarding implementation of European Council directives relating to fire services and fire safety measures is shown in the table.

The health and non-fire safety provisions of the framework and workplace directives were implemented on 1 January 1993. An announcement about implementation of the outstanding fire safety provisions of these directives will be made shortly. The regulations implementing the safety signs directive include an extended transitional provision for the introduction of fire safety signs.

The framework directive requires the introduction of measures to encourage improvements in the health and safety of workers at work. In particular, it requires that employers shall make an assessment of the risks to the health and safety of their employees. The other directives listed set out more specific health and safety requirements.

Working title	EC reference	Date of implementation[1]	Deadline for implementation[2]
Framework directive	89/391/EEC	1 January 1993	1 January 1993
Workplace directive	89/654/EEC	1 January 1993	1 January 1993
Construction sites directive	92/57/EEC	31 March 1995	1 January 1994
Safety signs directive	92/58/EEC	1 April 1996	24 December 1994
Boreholes Directive	92/91/EEC	1 October 1995	3 November 1994
Mines and quarries directive	92/104/EEC	26 October 1995	3 December 1994

[1] The date of implementation identifies the earliest date on which regulations came into force implementing some or all of the requirements of the directive.
[2] The EC deadline for implementation indicates the date from when implementing regulations should be in force.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a funding allocation for fire safety campaigning conducted by fire brigades; and if he will make a statement. [16658]

Mr. Sackville: The fire standard spending assessment distributional formula for England has been adjusted for 1996–97 to include indicators to reflect the work that fire brigades do on fire safety enforcement and education.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research his Department has conducted on the relationship between fire prevention campaigning and levels of deaths and injuries caused by fire; and if he will make a statement. [16659]

Mr. Sackville: Research is carried out following each national campaign to determine whether its message has been understood. It is difficult to establish a direct casual link between fire safety publicity and reductions in fire casualties. A number of factors can affect trends in fire casualties. However, the fact that the latest available statistics show fire deaths at their lowest level for 30 years may be due to the effectiveness of fire safety campaigns, and fire prevention work carried out by fire brigades.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a statutory requirement for fire safety campaigning to be conducted by fire brigades; and if he will make a statement. [16663]

Mr. Sackville: Brigades are already aware of importance of education and publicity in preventing fires; and several have conducted some very successful local campaigns. Moreover, the Government have very recently recognised the importance of this work by including a fire safety education factor in the formula used for calculating standard spending assessments for the fire service. But the question of whether or not it would be appropriate to introduce a statutory duty is still under review. Following last year's recommendation by the Audit Commission in its report, "In the Line of Fire", the matter is being considered by the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council, which includes representatives of both fire authorities and the fire service. We will look very carefully at whatever advice they may offer.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage of fire service budgets allocated to pensions provisions for the last year for which figures are available; what is the projected percentage of the fire service total budget to be allocated to pension provision by the year 2000; and if he will make a statement. [16664]

Mr. Sackville: Returns from fire authorities in England show that for the year 1993–94, net expenditure on firefighters' pensions represented 12 per cent. of the total fire service revenue expenditure. Over recent years, there has been a generally upward trend in the proportion of pensions expenditure against total expenditure for fire brigades. This trend is expected to continue in the short term.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of the transition to new combined authorities for fire services; and if he will make a statement. [16666]

Mr. Sackville: To date, seven combined fire authorities have been established for England and Wales. At present, they are operating as shadow authorities in preparation for taking over their full functions from 1 April. More combined fire authorities will be established over the next two years as local government reorganisation takes effect in other areas of England. Supplementary credit approvals of up to £3.875 million have been provisionally set aside by the Home Office to meet the transitional costs which may arise in respect of combined fire authorities in England and Wales during 1996–97.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total budget allocation to training in the fire service for each of the last five years for which figures are available; what is the predicted total budget allocated to training in the fire service for the next two years; and if he will make a statement. [16667]

Mr. Sackville: These figures are not held centrally. It is for each fire authority to set a budget for training which ensures that it fulfils its statutory obligations under the Fire Services Act 1947.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on fire service pensions. [16668]

Mr. Sackville: A review of the firefighters' pension scheme was announced in March 1994. The review group's terms of reference require it to identify ways in which the scheme could be made more comparable to other public service schemes. I hope that it will be possible to circulate a consultation document to the fire service organisations shortly.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total capital investment in the fire service for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [16669]

Mr. Sackville: Total capital expenditure (gross) in respect of the fire service in England and Wales was as follows:

	£ million
	Outturn
1990–91	52.865
1991–92	55.700
1992–93	64.195
1993–94	70.726
1994–95 (provisional)	72.377

Prisons (Assaults)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average assault rate in each prison for the first six months of the current financial year; and if he will make a statement. [16674]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average assault rate in each prison for the first six months of the current financial year.

Prisons (Costs)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average cost of a place in each prison for the six months of the current financial year; and if he will make a statement. [16676]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average cost of a place in each prison for the first six months of the current financial year.

Cost per place figures are calculated on a quarterly basis. The most recent figures are those for the second quarter of 1995–96, which are given in the attached tables, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Research Papers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Home Office research findings Nos. 23, 24 and 25 will be published; and if he will make a statement. [16660]

Mr. Maclean: Research findings 23 "Obscene, Threatening and Other Troublesome Phone Calls" and 24 "Young People and Crime" were published on 19 January. No. 25 "Anxiety about Crime: findings from the 1994 British Crime Survey" was published on 10 January. Copies are available in the Library.

Fire Service College

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the Fire Service College at Moreton-in-Marsh. [16665]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 13 February, column 517.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the accounts for the national fire service college for the year 1994–95; and what was the overall financial result. [16731]

Mr. Sackville: The fire service college annual report and accounts will be laid before the House on 27 February.

North Wales Fire Service Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will visit the North Wales fire service authority at the Llandudno HQ. [17327]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to visit the North Wales fire service authority in the near future.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the number of prisoners waiting removal or transfer to a psychiatric hospital under Mental Health Acts provisions, (b) the number of prisoners considered by prison doctors to be sufficiently mentally ill to occupy an in-patient bed in a prison health care centre, (c) the number of prisoners considered by prison doctors to require some form of mental health care but not removal or transfer to a psychiatric hospital or in-patient treatment in a prison health care centre and (d) the number of prisoners transferred to hospital by direction of the Home Secretary under sections 72 and 73 of the Mental Health Act 1959, sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983, or other provision in each year since 1979. [17008]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Jack Straw, dated 26 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question seeking certain statistical information about prisoners suffering from mental disorders.

On 20 January 1996, the most recent date for which such information is available is:

163 prisoners were recorded as awaiting removal or transfer to a psychiatric hospital under provisions of the Mental Health Act 1983;

853 prisoners were recorded as being sufficiently mentally disordered to be occupying beds in prison health care centres; and

1380 prisoners were recorded as requiring some form of mental health care but not transfer to hospital or in-patient treatment in a prison health care centre.

The attached table gives the number of transfers to hospital from 1979 onwards under sections 72 and 73 of the Mental Health Act 1959 and sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983. The method of producing these statistics was changed in 1994. The figures for 1992 and subsequent years omit prisoners transferred without the imposition of restrictions under section 49 of the 1983 Act. Such restrictions require the Home Secretary's consent on all matters relating to absence, transfer or, except where directed by a Mental Health Review Tribunal, discharge.

This explains the difference between the figures for 1992, 1993 and 1994 provided in the former Director General's letter to you of 10 February 1995.

Transfers of prisoners to hospital by direction of the Home Secretary under Sections 72 and 73 of the Mental Health Act 1959 and Sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983

Immigration (Carrier's Liability) Act 1987

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many carriers operating between Malaysia and the United Kingdom have incurred penalties under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987; what is the total number of (a) claims made, (b) penalties paid and (c) unpaid penalties to date; and if he will make a statement. [17333]

Mr. Kirkhope: Two airlines operate direct services between Malaysia and the United Kingdom. Both carriers have incurred charges on their routes from Kuala Lumpur. The amounts involved are:

Incurred: £764,000

Paid: £249,000

Waived: £147,000

Outstanding: £368,000.

The amount incurred reflects 415 breaches of the Act.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a reply will be sent to the hon. Member for Walsall, North's letter of 23 January, ref. 1671/96. [17160]

Mr. Sackville: A reply was sent on 22 February.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each year since 1979 (a) as at 31 March and (b) as at 31 December for the Metropolitan police what was (i) the number of police officers, (ii) the number of police constables, (iii) the man-hours available for beat duties and (iv) the number of civilians. [14719]

Mr. Maclean: In December 1995, there were nearly one quarter more officers on the strength of the Metropolitan police than in 1979. Police time on patrol is up by over one third compared with 1984, when such records began. Civilian strength has increased by almost one tenth since 1979 and over 2,600 posts previously filled by police officers have been civilianised. The more detailed information requested is given in tables I to III.

[1] Figures for Metropolitan police civilian staff are published in the annual reports of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. They include traffic wardens and school crossing patrols. From 1992 the figures have been published as at 31 March, not 31 December. Figures marked * are additional unpublished Metropolitan police data; no figures at 31 March are available for the years prior to 1985.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what communication he received from the Secretary of the Scott inquiry, concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16632]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 22 February at column 252.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons and at what level in his Department were involved in considering the Government's response to the report of the Scott inquiry; [16558]

(2) how much he estimates the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott report. [16646]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by the Prime Minister on 22 February at columns 239–40.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16549]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: My officials have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru about evidence which they have given to the inquiry. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document he considers relevant to his report.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16502]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: A sealed copy of the report was delivered to my office at approximately 3.50 pm on Thursday 15 February.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16568]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by the Prime Minister on 22 February at column 239.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16588]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her by the Prime Minister on 22 February at column 240.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16529]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: No members of my Department saw the report before it was presented to the House.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16477]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to her by the Prime Minister on 22 February, Official Report, column 242.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the officials in his department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16889]

Sir Paul Beresford: In accordance with the civil service management code, the Department's staff handbook requires that staff may not use or appear to use their public position to further their personal interests, or those of members of their immediate family or of any other person on the values of whose assets they advise. Should any potential conflict of interest arise, staff must disclose that fact to their line manager and ask that someone else should deal with the matter. Failure to comply with these rules is treated as a breach of discipline.

Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that this information, like all matters relating to their employment, is confidential between them and their employer.

Housing Investment

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total sum allowed for local authority credit approvals for housing investment in 1996–97; what were the figures for each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [15483]

Mr. Clappison: The total sum allowed for local authority credit approvals in England for housing investment in 1996–97 is £789 million. The figures for the previous years are given in the table.

Year	Local authority credit approvals (£ million)
1993–94 (outturn)	1,120
1994–95 (outturn)	872
1995–96 (estimated outturn)	869

The figures exclude credit approvals for the estate action scheme, which has been subsumed into the single regeneration budget. The scheme has been grant funded since 1995–96. The supplementary credit approvals issued to provide cover for specified capital grants are also excluded.

Council Tax

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is for 1995–96 and 1996–97 (a) the planned council tax yield for England, consistent with chapter 4 of HC30, (b) the level of those grants which, together with council tax, fund local authority budget requirements in England as defined for 1996–97, individually and in aggregate, including within 1995–96, community care grant transferred into revenue support grant in 1996–97, and adjusting for changes in functions and (c) the sum of (a) and (b). [17033]

Mr. Gummer: The Government do not set plans for the yield of council tax, which depends on decisions made by individual authorities.

£ Million

	1995–96	1996–97
(a) Estimated effect of those decisions on council tax yield, consistent with HC30, gross of council tax benefit	9,780	10,574
(b) External sources of finance to the budget requirement, consistent with HC30	33,610	34,120
Of which, grants:
Revenue support grant to local authorities	[1]18,952	17,999
Police grant (principal formula and additional rule 1)	3,036	3,158
SSA reduction grant	261	220
Other external sources of finance:
Non-domestic rates	11,354	12,736
City offset	7	7
(c) The sum of (a) estimated council tax yield and (b) external support	43,390	44,694

[1]Includes £648 million community care grant, and £34 million adjustment for metropolitan rail services, net of £26 million for waste regulation transfer.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what calculations underlay his Department's estimate that the planned proportion of local authority expenditure funded by council tax would increase to 26 per cent. by 1998–99. [17129]

Mr. Gummer: The public expenditure plans for local government for 1997–98 and 1998–99 were announced at the time of my right hon. and learned friend the Chancellor's November 1995 Budget Statement. Under these proposals, aggregate external finance—AEF—would increase from £34.69 billion in 1995–96 to £35.70 billion in 1998–99 to support total standard spending, TSS, which would increase from £43.46 billion to £46.30 billion. The Government have assumed that the difference between these two aggregates could be met through local authorities' own resources, primarily the council tax. Our best current estimate is that this would imply that the proportion of TSS funded by council tax would increase from 20 to 23 per cent. between 1995–96 and 1998–99. Decisions on levels of council tax and therefore on the proportion of services funded locally are, subject to capping, for local authorities themselves.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what performance target he has set for the inspectorate of pollution as regards answering letters from hon. Members. [16916]

Mr. Clappison: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, as part of my Department, does not reply directly to the letters of hon. Members. Replies normally come from Ministers in my Department. However, if hon. Members' letters concern the work of HMIP, the inspectorate will advise Ministers on a reply. Usually a reply should be received by an hon. Member within 10 to 15 working days. Under HMIP's citizens charter statement, any complaint from the public about a particular site is investigated promptly, and anyone making a complaint is informed of the outcome within 15 working days.

DEFENCE

Arms Sales

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Ministers approved the on-sale by Jordan of 29 British-supplied armoured recovery vehicles to Iraq. [16393]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In 1981, the Jordanian Government requested permission from the UK to supply to Iraq 29 armoured recovery vehicles planned to be exported to Jordan under a memorandum of understanding. Approval was given, as required by the memorandum, since the supply was consistent with Government policy at that time, which was that no lethal equipment would be exported to Iraq, the vehicles in question being classified as non-lethal. The arrangement was made before the establishment of the Iran-Iraq export guidelines in 1984.

Procurement and Industrial Policy

Mr. Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he plans to ensure that recommendations Nos. 18 and 19 of the first report from the Defence Select Committee of Session 1995–96, HC 61, on aspects of defence procurement and industrial policy are implemented. [16456]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government memorandum in response to these and the other recommendations contained in the Defence and Trade and Industry Committees' joint report on "Aspects of Defence Procurement and Industrial Policy", was published by the Committees on 7 February 1996.

RAF Institute for Aviation Medicine

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which non-NATO countries have received (a) advice, (b) training, (c) supplies and (d) support from the RAF Institute for Aviation Medicine since 1984. [16315]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I will write to the hon. Member.

Military Services and Training

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military services and training provided by his Department between 1974 and 1979 to (a) the middle east, (b) Iran and (c) Iraq; and what was the nature and value of those services. [16988]

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to comment on the policy of previous Governments.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16830]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information requested is as follows:

There is a statutory right for the public to inspect the annual accounts of all the service museums, held by the Charities Commission; the National Army museum and the RAF museum publish their annual reports voluntarily. Statutory public access to the annual report and accounts of the Service Sound and Vision Corporation is available at Companies House. The Oil and Pipelines Agency's annual report and accounts are laid before each House of Parliament.

None of the MOD's executive NDPBs publishes the agendas or minutes of meetings; and there is no statutory requirement to do so.

Appointees to the OPA and SSVC are required to declare any personal interests and records are maintained. In the case of SSVC, any members' interest are also registered at Companies House.

Aircraft Crashes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will make a substantive reply to the letter regarding aircraft crash pollution sent on 27 March 1995 by the general secretary of the Celtic League; if he will publish the text of his reply; and if he will make a statement. [17571]

Mr. Soames: My officials responded on 22 February this year. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sites and aircraft type involved in serious crash incidents in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Cornwall, (d) Northern Ireland, (e) the rest of England and (f) the United Kingdom since 1980, indicating (i) the incidents for which RAF post-crash management techniques have been implemented and (ii) the cases where toxic pollution was (1) measured and (2) recorded; and if he will make a statement. [17572]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

Army Base Repair Organisation

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the key targets for the chief executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation for 1996–97. [18034]

Mr. Soames: The chief executive of the Army Base Repair Organisation has been set the following key targets for 1996–97.

1. To remain within ABRO's allocated budget.
2. To deliver a responsive repair service, which both matches the needs of the customer in peace and for operations to the agreed timelines, quantity and quality criteria and offers value for money.
3. To implement a comprehensive output based system to measure customer satisfaction.
4. To submit to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces the results of the land command support market Test by 31 January 1997.
5. To complete the transfer of all repair activities from ABRO Old Dalby and close the workshop by 31 December 1996.
6. To reduce by 2 per cent. the 1996–97 ratio of labour costs to hours of production by 31 March 1997.
7. To obtain tenders for the re-installation of the strategic test facilities for Challenger and Warrior transmission and steer units by 31 March 1997.

Edzell Base

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 February, Official Report, column 90, how often the Ministry of Defence joint working group has met since June 1995; and at how many of these meetings the subject of the Edzell base closure was on the agenda. [17407]

Mr. Soames: The Ministry of Defence joint working party group was set up specifically to deal with the closure of RAF Edzell, and it has met three times.

TRANSPORT

Whisper Concrete

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the use of Whisper concrete on the M18 and A50 and its future use in road building. [16711]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways' Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Tim Devlin, dated 27 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the use of Whisper concrete.

Trials of the concrete road surface, referred to as Whisper concrete, have been carried out on the M18 and A50. This surface differs from conventional concrete in that skid resistant aggregate is incorporated within the top layer and subsequently exposed to create a random texture. The objective is to provide both a safe and durable road surface but one less noisy than some conventional concrete roads.

Preliminary assessment of the two trials is encouraging but evaluation of longer term performance is still continuing. It is hoped that a final assessment will be possible following this winter. Subject to performance proving satisfactory, consideration will then be given to permit wider use.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total expenditure by his Department on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 broken down by category. [16777]

Mr. Norris: Expenditure of some £4.5 million which can be attributed to the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 is as follows:

£3 million paid to the Isle of Wight as part of the local transport capital settlement;

£1.3 million paid to British Rail by the Franchising Director in support of passenger rail services on the Island line;

£80,000 by the Driving Standards Agency;

£35,000 on vehicle testing operations, including staff costs;

and £74,000 by the Coastguard Agency.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of accidents involving HGVs attributable (a) in whole and (b) in part to the defective eyesight of the HGV driver for the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available. [16728]

Mr. Norris: No statistics are collected on the relationship between accidents and defective eyesight; it is practically impossible to link defective eyesight and accident liability. Even if tests of eyesight were routinely conducted after accidents, it could not be established that poor eyesight was responsible.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was his Department's budget for (a) consultants' fees and (b) all other costs associated with the public and press launch for the introduction of (i) the Great Western, (ii) South West Trains and (iii) London Tilbury Southend rail franchises. [17006]

Mr. Watts: The Great Western and South West Trains rail franchises were publicly launched with the assistance of officials from my Department and its marketing consultants—Shandwick Consultants Ltd. It is not possible to identify separately the costs associated with my Department's role in these events. Information about payments to individual contractors is commercially confidential.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he has given to the Rail Regulator regarding the introduction of competition for passenger rail services up to 31 December 1996; and what arrangements will apply after this date. [16983]

Mr. Watts: Guidance on competition for rail passenger services was included in the guidance given by the Secretary of State to the Rail Regulator on 31 March 1994. The regulator published a policy statement, "Competition for railway passenger services" in December 1994. Both of these documents are in the House Library.

Rail (Speed Restrictions)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the sections of rail track currently subject to temporary speed restrictions due to the poor condition of the track; and in each case, when it is estimated that these speed restrictions will be lifted. [17035]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack informs me that this information is not held centrally and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

M62

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated relating to increasing the capacity of the M62 junctions 12 to 14 since the cancellation of the M62 relief road. [17095]

Mr. Watts: Work is at an early stage and options are still being identified. So far, we have commissioned work on traffic management and demand, and on possible minor improvements to the M62.

We are also developing transport models in partnership with the Greater Manchester authorities. These will enable us to assess behavioural responses and to test alternatives.

Evaluation will start when all the information has been gathered.

We shall consult the public, and others, when we have identified effective and affordable alternatives.

Royal Train

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safeguards will be put in place to guarantee the continued service of the royal train after privatisation. [17113]

Mr. Watts: Confidential contractual arrangements are being put in place to guarantee the continued service of the royal train after privatisation.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Government have to prevent young people from using high-powered motor cycles. [17552]

Mr. Norris: Implementation of the second EC directive on driving licences will restrict motor cycle riders under the age of 21 to machines with a power output of up to 33 brake horse power (25kW) for two years.

Tug Coverage

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out by home port the coverage of tugs on the north and west coasts of Scotland (a) before and (b) since the publication of the Donaldson report on the Braer incident indicating whether it is year-round; and if he will make a statement. [17211]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Alex Salmond, dated 27 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the coverage of tugs in the North and West coasts of Scotland.

To ensure that the Coastguard is able to provide details of tugs available in an emergency they are maintained on a database at each Coastguard Rescue Centre. Tug availability may vary from time to time. Additionally standing arrangements exist with tug brokers to ensure that the Coastguard can obtain up to date whereabouts and availability of all tugs.

The Coastguard maintain a tug during the six month winter period in the Minches. The current vessel is the SMIT LLOYD SAFE.

Mr. Martin Helm

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the value of all severance payments, and payments in kind, made by his Department to Mr. Martin Helm. [17239]

Mr. Norris: Mr. Martin Helm left the Department on 31 December 1995. He was paid a severance payment calculated in accordance with the rules of the civil service compensation scheme. Such payments are based on age, pay and length of service at the time of leaving. A payment of compensation in lieu of notice was also paid. It is not customary of divulge the value of payments made to individuals.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16816]

Mr. Norris: The following is a list of the answers for each of the Department of Transport's executive NDPBs.

Trinity House Lighthouse Service (THLS) and Northern Lights Board (NLB)

(a) and (b) THLS and NLB prepare annual reports which are consolidated into the Annual Report and Accounts of the General Lighthouse Fund. The Accounts are laid before Parliament as required by statute.

(c), (d) and (e) Neither THLS nor NLB publish minutes or agendas of meetings or a register or members' interests. There is no statutory requirement to do so.

London Regional Passengers' Committee (LRPC)

(a) LRPC publishes an annual report under statutory requirement.

(b) (c) and (d) Annual accounts, minutes of meetings and agendas of meetings are published voluntarily.

(e) A register of members' interests is not published. There is no statutory requirement to do so.

Traffic Director for London

(a) and (b) The Traffic Director publishes an annual report and accounts under statutory requirement.

(c), (d) and (e) the Traffic Director is a Corporation Sole and does not have a board, hold formal board meetings or have a register of members' interests. Therefore there are no minutes, agendas or register to publish.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what stage has been reached in the privatisation of the Transport Research Laboratory. [18219]

Mr. Norris: Negotiations with the preferred bidder, the Transport Research Foundation, are continuing. I expect the sale to be completed by the middle of March.

Thameslink 2000

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the Thameslink 2000 project. [18217]

Mr. Watts: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral statement given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Road Tax Discs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicle excise duty tax discs have been reported stolen; how many duplicate tax discs were issued to replace those stolen during the same period; and how much revenue has been generated by charging motorists for replacements in the latest 12-month period for which figures are available. [17246]

Mr. Norris: Statistics on stolen tax discs are not available. In 1995, 140,849 duplicate discs were issued to replace lost, stolen, destroyed, mutilated, illegible or faded discs. An administration fee of £7 is charged.

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number and value of items, equipment and furniture, (a) stolen from and (b) otherwise unaccounted for within his Department and its agencies, by region, identifying all such items with a value above £5,000. [17240]

Mr. Norris: The answer is as follows:

Region	(a) Stolen		(b) Unaccounted for
	Number	Value £	Number	Value £
Eastern	3	1,570	3	1,019
North-east	26	13,245	—	—
South-west	3	2,526	3	195
Midlands	14	24,831	—	—
London	186	120,404	—	—
North-west	1	60	—	—
Scotland and Northern Ireland	1	590	9	2,568
Wales	10	2,189	9	684
South and South-east	16	14,665	7	1,843

No single item has a value above £5,000. The largest losses are due to theft of computer chips.

Crossrail

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) consultants and (b) other employees are currently employed by the crossrail project team. [17237]

Mr. Norris: The crossrail project team currently employs 304 consultancy staff, of whom 243 are on short-term assignments, and 106 British Rail and London Underground staff.

Ms Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list total payments made to date by his Department to (a) consultants, (b) outside organisations and (c) individuals for work on the crossrail scheme indicating the name of body involved and the services provided. [17236]

Mr. Norris: Total payments made to date by the Department of Transport to consultants for work on the crossrail scheme amount to some £735,000. The consultants and services provided are as follows:

Scott Wilson Kirkpatrick: Audit of estimated cost

Bechtel Limited: Value engineering study

S G Warburn and Co. Ltd.: Joint venture study

Bovis/Sir Alexander Gibb: Study of cost-effectiveness

Ove Arup and Partners: Small-scale alternatives study.

No payments have been made by the Department to other outside organisations—apart from London Transport and British Rail—or individuals for work on the crossrail scheme.

Ms Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the total payments made by his Department to the crossrail project team to date. [17238]

Mr. Norris: Payments made to date by the Department of Transport to London Transport and British Rail in respect of cross rail amount to some £144 million.

Trunk Roads (Greater London)

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of the trunk road network within Greater London has a currently residual life of (a) less than 12 months, (b) between one and four years, (c) between five and nine years, (d) between 10 and 14 years, (e) between 15 and 19 years and (f) greater than 19 years; and if he will make a statement. [17250]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways' Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Glenda Jackson, dated 27 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the residual life of the trunk road network in Greater London.

We do not keep residual life information in the form you have requested. This is because the form of construction of much of London's trunk road network is different to present day construction standards. Consequently the technical survey system we would normally use cannot reliably predict residual. Instead we assess the overall condition and life expectancy of the carriageways by taking into account other forms of surveys, underlying ground conditions, traffic volumes and any historical data we can muster.

We continually monitor the condition of the trunk road network in London, bringing forward maintenance schemes as necessary. The priority and form of work for each is considered individually taking into account condition, cost and design life, as well as other special factors such as the scale of disruption caused by the alternative forms of works.

Tyne and Wear Fire Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents in which the fire service was called to road traffic accidents occurred in the Tyne and Wear fire authority area in the last three complete years; and how such incidents are taken account of in standard spending assessment calculation. [16094]

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The following information about road traffic accidents in the area of the Tyne and Wear fire authority has been taken from annual returns provided by the fire authority (a financial year basis was adopted in 1993):

1992: 545

1993 (first quarter): 94

1993–94: 414

1994–95: 453.

Road traffic accidents are covered in the fire calls indicator which is one of the factors in the fire standard spending assessment distributional formula. For 1996–97, this takes account of the average over the two years 1993 and 1994 of the number of fires, fire false alarm calls and special service calls attended by local authority fire brigades. For this purpose, the special service calls included are road traffic accidents, rail and air accidents, leaks and spills. The number of special service calls for 1994 relates to the financial year 1994–95.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Negative Resolution Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many orders by negative resolution were laid between October 1994 and July 1995; of these how many were (a) brought into effect (i) immediately, (ii) within 10 days, (iii) within 20 days, (iv) within 30 days, (v) within 40 days and (vi) after more than 40 days (b) prayed against then granted debates (1) before being brought into effect and (2) after being brought into effect and (c) how many were rescinded or not brought into effect as a result of parliamentary scrutiny. [16073]

Mr. Newton: The number of negative statutory instruments laid between October 1994 and July 1995 was 1,078. Of these, 168 were prayed against and debates were granted on 28 of them—22 were debated in Standing Committee and six on the Floor of the House.

The remaining information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

BMARC

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) of 26 January, Official Report, column 423, how many of the new total of applications had (a) full end user certificate or (b) purchaser orders for each of the years mentioned. [15176]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) on 16 February 1996, Official Report, columns 42–43. Of the export licence applications covered by that answer, one quarter were accompanied by copies of end user certificates, and around 45 per cent. had copies of purchase orders originating from either the agent or the intended consignee. There is some overlap between these figures, as some applications were supported by both types of documentation.

Iraq (Military and Financial Credit)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will obtain from the United States Government records held by them on the military and financial credit support afforded to the Iraqi Government between August 1988 and August 1990 relating to United Kingdom-based banks as their subsidiaries. [15976]

Mr. Nelson: No.

Iraq (Military Equipment)

Mr. Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will seek information from the United States Senate Banking Committee relating to the Technology Development Group and the supply of military equipment to Iraq. [15008]

Mr. Nelson: No.

Timber

Mr. Gill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the contribution that home-produced timber makes to the balance of trade figures. [16086]

Mr. Oppenheim: The standard international trade classification, under which UK trade is recorded, does not separately identify home-produced timber. The UK crude deficit in timber, wherever produced, was £1.4 billion to 1994 and £0.9 billion in January to September 1995.

Asbestos

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the amount and monetary value of asbestos cement and asbestos friction materials imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [16617]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The answer is in the table:

UK imports of asbestos cement and asbestos friction materials

	Asbestos cement		Asbestos friction materials
Year	£ million	Tonnes	£ million	Tonnes
1991	29	88,178	18	4,099
1992	23	71,210	21	5,706
1993	20	61,816	22	3,668
1994	25	74,154	23	4,643
1995 (January–September)	15	47,024	18	3,672

Notes:

1. Asbestos cement is defined as heading 661.83 of the standard international trade classification (SITC) revision 3, and includes articles of cellulose fibre-cement.
2. Asbestos friction materials are defined as heading 663.8 SITC revision 3.

Capita Managed Services Ltd.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much work from his Department was allocated to Capita Managed Services before the resignation of Mr. J. Jasper as director. [16250]

Mr. Oppenheim: This information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many directors of Capita Managed Services at the time they were appointed to collect costs against disqualified directors have themselves been, or are, directors of companies which have been liquidated. [16274]

Mr. Oppenheim: As far as is known, no directors of Capita Managed Services Ltd. were, at the time the company was awarded the contract to collect costs from disqualified directors, themselves directors of companies which had been the subject of winding up proceedings.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions (a) the Registrar of Companies for England and Wales and (b) the Inspector General of the Insolvency Service or their representatives met John Arthur Jasper; and what was the nature of these meetings. [16276]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Registrar of Companies and his staff have had several meetings with Mr. J. A. Jasper over a period of several years in connection with a computer services contract with Capita entered into in 1991 and with other possible contracts to provide services to Companies House. Neither the inspector general of the Insolvency Service nor his staff has had any meetings with Mr. Jasper.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions (a) he and (b) other members of his Department met or had contact with John Arthur Jasper; and if he will make a statement on these meetings. [16277]

Mr. Oppenheim: Neither I nor other Ministers in my Department have met Mr. Jasper on official business. In respect of the Registrar of Companies for England and Wales and the inspector general of the Insolvency Service, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave today to his Order question 16276. Information on whether other of my officials have met or had contact with Mr. Jasper is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Official Receiver

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he hopes to announce the contracts for Official Receiver services to be contracted out; and which services (a) will and (b) will not be contracted out, indicating the considerations underlying each decision. [16412]

Mr. Oppenheim: I hope to be able to make an announcement before the end of the month regarding the outcome of the contracting out exercise undertaken by the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade at what times the bidders for the work of the Official Receiver were allowed to change or adjust their bids; how many were (a) given and (b) not given this option; and if he will list the changes made to bids indicating their source. [16415]

Mr. Oppenheim: None of the six bidders invited to tender for the work available to be contracted out were permitted to change or adjust their final bids. They were all, however, invited to clarify certain points contained in their proposals during the technical and financial evaluation. The three organisations offering the best possibility of value for money were invited to further clarify some details of their proposals but no adjustment to their original bids was permitted.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many bids for the Official Receiver's work were not in the form demanded by the tender documentation. [16414]

Mr. Oppenheim: All bids received were in the form specified in the invitation to tender.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the impact on staff numbers if the work of the Official Receiver is transferred to the private sector; and when the trade unions will be notified of any redundancies. [16416]

Mr. Oppenheim: Up to 812 staff could be covered by the application of TUPE in any contracting out of official receivers functions.

No redundancies of staff in the Insolvency Service have been identified.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the postponement of the decision on the future of the Insolvency Service. [16272]

Mr. Oppenheim: The planned announcement of the outcome of the contracting out exercise undertaken by the Insolvency Service was postponed to enable further discussions to be held with bidders appearing to offer the best prospect of value for money.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the running costs of the Insolvency Service for the year ended 31 January identifying the costs of (a) staff, (b) leases and office rentals, (c) stationery and office equipment and (d) other support services. [17465]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Insolvency Service year end is 31 March. Its running cost budget for the year to 31 March 1996 is £54,984,000, of which total pay costs are £36,689,000, accommodation costs £10,754,000, stationery and office machinery £825,000 and other running costs £6,716,000.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when his officials last met the liquidators of BCC1. [17063]

Mr. Oppenheim: My officials last met the joint liquidators on 31 March 1995.

Single Market Legislation

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent each EU country has adopted single market legislation; and if he will make a statement. [16402]

Mr. Oppenheim: The following are the European Commission's figures of 8 November 1995 for the percentage of single market measures in the 1985 Commission White Paper on the single market which have been transposed into national law by member states of the European Union.

	Per cent.
Denmark	99.1
Luxembourg	96.4
Portugal	96.4
Netherlands	95.5
France	95.0
Sweden	95.0
United Kingdom	93.7
Spain	93.7
Italy	91.9
Belgium	91.0
Ireland	91.0
Greece	89.6

	Per cent.
Finland	89.6
Germany	88.2
Austria	77.8

We are encouraging the Commission to ensure that member states catch up on delays, and, at least as importantly, to ensure single market measures are effectively and evenly enforced in each member state. We are also making efforts to ensure that the UK catches up on its backlog.

Defence Jobs (Lancashire)

Mr. Elletson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the number of jobs in Lancashire which depend on the defence industry and its suppliers; and if he will make a statement. [16306]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The latest estimate for the number of defence-dependent jobs in Lancashire is 30,000. This is from a survey commissioned by Lancashire county council and represents some 25 per cent. of employment in manufacturing industry and about 5 per cent. of all employment in Lancashire.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the studies currently funded by the Medical Research Council into Alzheimer's disease and the amounts of money awarded for each study; and if he will make a statement; [16901]

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's funding for research into Alzheimer's disease. [16900]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The DTI's support for research into Alzheimer's disease is funded through the research councils from the science budget.

Medical Research Council funding of research into Alzheimer's disease was £1.376 million in 1994–95, the last financial year for which complete information is available. The various research projects are listed, together with the corresponding amount of money:

1. Research carried out at MRC establishments:

MRC environmental epidemiology unit: Alzheimer's disease in relation to drinking water—£28,000.

MRC laboratory of molecular biology: the molecular biology of Alzheimer's disease—£536,000.

MRC neurochemical pathology unit:

Aluminium as a risk factor for Alzheimer's disease—£320,00.

Human brain peptidases involved in the pathogenesis of Alzheimer's disease—£120,000.

Transgenic models of cerebral amyloid deposition—£214,000.

A neuropsychological comparison of Lewy body dementia, Parkinson's disease and Alzheimer's disease—£38,000.

2. Grant-funded research:

Ninewells hospital, Dundee—department of clinical pharmacology: the glycobiology of the amyloid precursor protein—£35,000.

St. Mary's hospital, London: transgenesis as a mechanism to develop animal models of human disease—£22,000.

Institute of Psychiatry, London:

A study of the association between Apo E e4 and Alzheimer's disease in a cohort of older hypertensive subjects—£27,000.

Modelling of Alzheimer's disease in transgenic mice—£49,000.

University of Cambridge—department of experimental psychology: immunotoxic lesions of primate cholinergic projections—£2,000.

University of Sussex: development of neuronal cell lines from normal and Alzheimer's disease patients; £3,000.

In addition, the MRC estimates that in 1994–95, a further £2.54 million was spent on research which was of some relevance to Alzheimer's disease.

The Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council is also funding one research project related to Alzheimer's disease.

Babraham Institute: Candidate neuronal genes in cognition and ageing—£95,250 over three years.

Three other research councils, the Economic and Social Research Council, the Natural Environment Research Council and the Engineering and Physical Science Research Council are also funding some research which is, or may prove to be, of relevance to Alzheimer's disease.

Exports

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total value of exports to (a) the middle east, (b) Iraq and (c) Iran between 1974 and 1979. [16906]

Mr. Nelson: The available information is given in the following table:

UK visible exports to the middle east[1]

Year	Middle east[1]	Iraq	Iran
1974	1,085.5	59.8	278.6
1975	1,767.8	137.1	494.7
1976	2,273.3	151.8	513.1
1977	3,068.7	167.4	658.4
1978	3,476.4	216.7	752.0
1979	3,081.7	201.2	231.8

Note:

[1] The middle east consists of: Cyprus, Syria, Lebanon, Israel, Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar, Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah etc., Oman, North Yemen, South Yemen, Iraq and Iran.

Machine Tools

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the levels of sales of machine tools to (a) the middle east, (b) Iraq and (c) Iran between 1974 and 1979. [16987]

Mr. Nelson: Information before 1979 is available only for those countries which accounted for a significant proportion of UK exports of machine tools or those for which machine tools formed a significant proportion of total UK visible exports. The available information is given in the table:

UK exports of machine tools[1]

Osmium-187

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of osmium-187 exist in the United Kingdom; what licensing arrangements cover its import and export; and what is the current market price per kilogramme of osmium-187. [16756]

Mr. Oppenheim: Osmium 187 is a constituent of naturally occurring osmium—1.6 per cent. abundance. It is not subject to either export or import control.

The price per gram is approximately £10.

I am not aware that the 187 isotope is available in the UK in a separated form. Any inquiries to discover the quantities of Osmium 187 could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Export Controls

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to publish a consultation paper with proposals for (a) new legislation in place of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 and (b) export licensing procedures suitable for peacetime requirements. [17233]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government are currently considering Sir Richard Scott's recommendations and will be publishing a consultation paper.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total expenditure by his Department on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 broken down by category. [16770]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Department has regional information on the following programmes in the Isle of Wight area:

	1994–95
Regional Selective Assistance	159,634
Business Enterprise Services Budget	150,000
Business Link Pump Priming Budget	100,000
Regional Enterprise Grants for Innovation Projects	73,500

There was other departmental expenditure on the Isle of Wight which cannot be broken down on an area basis or where the work necessary to do so would result in disproportionate cost.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16881]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Each senior official and special adviser is required to make a declaration of his or her financial interests. This enables the Department to prevent potential conflicts of interest arising. In the case of other officials, conflicts of interest are dealt with by their line management. I have no plans to establish a central register.

Tripod Engineering (Iraq)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the cover on the contract between Tripod Engineering and the Government of Iraq signed on 8 November 1988 was taken up and forms part of the ECGD outstanding claims with respect to the Government of Iraq. [16316]

Mr. Oppenheim: Yes.

Duke Power

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of whether Duke Power of North Carolina is a suitable potential buyer for nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom. [17532]

Mr. Eggar: No assessment has been made as the contact was a preliminary and indirect one.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on Duke Power's safety record and its experience of operating gas-cooled reactors. [17533]

Mr. Eggar: Duke Power does not own or operate any power stations in the UK. The advanced gas-cooled reactor power stations are unique to the UK. Any operator in the UK needs to satisfy the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate that it has the ability to meet the high standards of safety which the NII demands before it can be licensed to operate a nuclear installation.

Bankruptcy Costs

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average cost of administering a bankruptcy in each of the last three years. [17469]

Mr. Oppenheim: Information on unit costs remains confidential until the conclusion of, and announcement of a decision on, the proposal for contracting our official receivers' case administration work. I will write to the hon. Member when an announcement has been made.

Directors' Disqualifications

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many directors were disqualified as a result of the work completed by the Insolvency Service; and how many directors were prosecuted for fraudulent trading as a result of work conducted by the Insolvency Service in the 12 months ended 31 January. [17464]

Mr. Oppenheim: During the 12 months ended 31 January 1996, 721 directors were disqualified and 26 directors were prosecuted for fraudulent trading.

ROM-Data Corporation

Mr. Coe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the findings of his Department's inquiry into the circumstances of the grant of regional selective assistance for the ROM-Data Corporation. [18075]

Mr. Lang: I have today placed a report summarising the outcome of my Department's inquiry in the Library of the House.

Nigeria (Export Licences)

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number and type of export licences that his Department has (a) issued for non-lethal equipment to Nigeria between 20 January 1995 and 20 November 1995 and (b) issued for dual use equipment since 20 November 1995. [14893]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 12 February 1996]: A statistical analysis of export licences granted for military, para-military and security equipment granted during 1995 will shortly be placed in the Library of the House. The analysis will include all countries of destination for which these licences were issued, including Nigeria. I shall write to the hon. Member when this is done. Fourteen licences were issued for dual-use equipment between 20 January 1995 and 8 February 1996, as follows:

Number of licences	Heading[1]
9	1C
1	2B
3	3A
1	5A2

[1] Headings under group 3 of part III of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 and subsequently schedule 1 to the Dual-Use and Related Goods (Export Control) Regulations 1995.

Tandem plc

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all grants made by development agencies and other Government-funded bodies to Tandem and its subsidiaries, including British Eagle Cycles of Newtown; and if he will make a statement. [16207]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 22 February 1996]: The information requested is not collated. I have no record of my Department having made grants to either of these businesses.

Company Grants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the practice of relocation by companies in search of grants between areas where grants are available. [16224]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 22 February 1996]: The Government's regional policy aims to attract companies to the assisted areas. However, grants are not available simply for relocation to those areas. Any assistance must normally bring about a significant net increase in employment.

HEALTH

Medium Secure Facilities

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will undertake research to establish whether the use by health authorities and NHS trusts of privately owned medium secure facilities for detained patients costs more than using equivalent provision in NHS units; [16785]

(2) if the increased number of purpose-built medium secure beds is expected to eliminate the need for the use of privately owned medium secure facilities. [16786]

Mr. Bowis: The availability of medium secure places in the independent sector provides health authorities with a greater choice. Selection of suitable places is a matter for health authorities who are responsible for commissioning services in a way which makes the best use of available resources to meet the needs of their population.

Beds and Staff

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage change there has been since 1979 in the number of (a) hospital beds in the NHS, (b) full-time equivalent nursing staff and (c) bureaucrats and administrative staff. [13248]

Mr. Malone: Information on the average daily number of available beds in 1979 is published in the "Statistical Bulletin: NHS Hospital Activity Statistics 1979–1990/91". Information for 1994–95 is published in "Bed Availability for England: 1994–95". Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Information on managers, administrative and clerical staff, nursing and midwifery staff is shown in the table.

NHS hospital and community health services (HCHS) and general medical services (GMS) staff, England at September 1979 and 1994—whole-time equivalents

	1979	1994	Percentage change
HCHS general and senior managers and administrative and clerical staff[1]	102,960	157,560	53
HCHS and GMS nursing and midwifery staff[2]	[3]278,760	346,700	n/a
Excluded from the nursing and midwifery figures above:
Learners[4]	76,650	11,080	—
Project 2000 students[4]	n/a	32,000	—

Notes:

[1] There were 41,270 GMS practice managers and other administrative staff in 1994; comparable figures are not available for 1979.

[2] HCHS agency staff and "learners" are excluded.

[3] Figure does not take into account the reduction in nurses standard working hours in 1980–81 from 40 to 37.5 hours a week, and is not directly comparable with the figure given for 1994.

[4] Learners are nurses on traditional nurse training courses, spending the majority of their time on patient care, and are directly employed by the NHS HCHS. Project 2000 training was introduced in 1989 and has gradually replaced traditional pre-registration nurse training. Project 2000 students are funded by bursaries, they are supernumerary not employees, and are thus excluded from the WTE count of NHS HCHS nursing staff. Figures for Project 2000 students are headcounts and should not be added to other figures which are whole-time equivalents.

HCHS figures are as at 30 September for each year. GMS figures are as at 1 October for each year. All figures are rounded to the nearest ten. Percentages are calculated using unrounded figures.

Department of Health annual Non-Medical Workforce Census and bi-annual General Medical Practitioner Census.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16880]

Mr. Horam: There is a requirement in the Department's conditions of service manual that staff faced with a conflict of business interest, which they may be able to further as a result of their official position, must declare this to their personnel section. They must comply with any subsequent instruction from the Department regarding such interests. I see no need for the establishment of a central register of officials' interests.

Kidney Transplant Patients

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will exempt from prescription charges kidney transplant patients who have to take drugs on a lifelong basis. [16898]

Mr. Malone: We have no plans to extend the medical exemption arrangements.

Infertility Treatment

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if (a) St. Thomas's hospital, (b) King's College hospital and (c) St. George's hospital, Tooting have a co-payment scheme for in vitro fertilisation treatment patients. [16737]

Mr. Horam: None of these hospitals has such a scheme.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if patients treated at the assisted conception unit at Chelsea and Westminster hospital are seen by NHS consultants in NHS time; [16740]

(2) what charge is made to patients at the assisted conception unit at Chelsea and Westminster hospital; and what it covers; [16741]

(3) if he will make a statement on the assisted conception unit at the Chelsea and Westminster hospital. [16780]

Mr. Horam: The assisted conception unit at Chelsea and Westminster hospital opened in November 1995. Since opening, it has provided 11 cycles of in vitro fertilisation treatment to national health service patients and eight cycles to private patients.

In 1996–97 the unit aims to undertake 600 cycles of IVF. At present, it has two contracts with health authorities to provide a total of 270 cycles to the NHS during 1996–97.

Both NHS and private patients are seen by consultants working under the terms of their contracts with the Chelsea and Westminster NHS trust.

At present private patients at the unit are charged £800 for each cycle of IVF treatment. Health authorities are charged an identical amount for NHS patients. This is projected to cover the trust's costs and deliver an appropriate return on capital during the first full year of operation—1996–97—and subsequently, if business plan projections are met.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has taken external legal advice about whether patients of the assisted conception unit at Chelsea and Westminster hospital are national health service patients or private patients. [16739]

Mr. Horam: No.

1991 Census

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what revisions he expects to make to the 1991 census and when these will be announced; and what effect these changes will have on the statistics available for populations within county boundaries. [16742]

Mr. Horam: There are no plans to revise the population figures from the 1991 census. The Registrar General's current series of mid-year population estimates are based on the 1991 census and include adjustments for estimated under-coverage in the census as well as for births, deaths and registration since 1991. Census figures for new local authority areas created under the Local Government Act 1992 will be published as each new area takes effect.

Correspondence

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set target dates for replies to letters sent to his Department. [16783]

Mr. Horam: We aim to reply to all letters within 20 working days of receipt.

Incontinence

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he is currently funding or planning to fund into the problems and treatment of incontinence. [16738]

Mr. Bowis: The Department commissioned the social policy research unit of York university to research and produce a report on "The Role of the Continence Adviser in England and Wales". This was published in January 1994 and distributed to all health authorities, NHS trusts and continence advisers. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library.

The Department has also commissioned three other research projects on incontinence:

A feasibility study on costs, quality and effectiveness of continence services—social policy research unit, university of York.

The development of methodologies to identify urinary incontinence and set targets for health gain—health and community care research unit, university of Liverpool.

Evaluation of health interventions by continence services and primary health care teams on patient outcomes related to incontinence—department of public health and primary care, university of Oxford).

These projects have just been completed and are subject to peer review.

In addition to Department of Health funding, the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, has commissioned a large research programme costing about £5.5 million entitled "Incontinence: A population laboratory approach to the epidemiology and evaluation of care". The programme is based on five interlinked projects:

Incontinence: prevalence needs and associated factors;

Evaluation of services for incontinence;

Evaluation of treatments for detrusor instability

Evaluation of treatments for genuine stress incontinence;

Incontinence: incidence, natural history and aetiological factors.

The NHS centre for reviews and dissemination is currently carrying out a systematic review on interventions to manage enuresis.

Research is being undertaken as part of the NHS research and development programme on:

Development of an improved reusable incontinence bedpan;

Treatment of urinary incontinence in stroke patients;

The effect of oestrogen replacement therapy on urinary tract dysfunction and urogenital collagen structure on postmenopausal women with stress incontinence.

Following completion of each research programme, the Department will consider how best to encourage health care decision makers to act on the findings.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support he plans to give voluntary agencies concerned with the problem of incontinence (a) in 1995 and (b) in future years. [16757]

Mr. Bowis: In 1995–96, the Department is providing funding to voluntary organisations concerned with incontinence as follows:

The Continence Foundation—£85,000 towards its helpline and administrative costs, as part of grant awards which began in 1993–94.

InconTact—£25,000, as part of a three-year grant of £25,000 per year towards the costs of its project to develop a continence public awareness programme.

The Enuresis Resource and Information Centre—£47,113, made up of £33,000 as part of a three-year grant towards its administrative costs, £5,000 as part of a two-year grant for its project to pilot training seminars for doctors and nurses on nocturnal enuresis and £9,113 for the translation of ERIC's guide for parents on bedwetting into five ethnic minority languages.

In addition to the above amounts, the Department is providing £50,000 to support National Continence Day/Bedwetting Day which will be held on 19 and 20 March 1996.

Sir John Hannan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the work of (a) his Department and (b) the NHS in the past year in respect of continence services. [16758]

Mr. Bowis: The Department of Health supports a number of initiatives.

The organisation of continence services locally and the manner in which they are delivered, are matters for district health authorities and hospital and community trusts.

Ear, Nose and Throat Operations

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many procedures were carried out on children aged up to 16 years in each of the last 10 years for (a) myringotomy, (b) adenoidectomy and (c) tonsillectomy. [16905]

Mr. Horam: The information available for National Health Service hospitals in England is shown in the table:

	Myringotomy	Adenoidectomy	Tonsillectomy
1989–90	5,173	17,601	45,645
1990–91	5,241	16,577	47,582

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total expenditure by his Department on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 broken down by category. [16776]

Mr. Horam: The information is as follows:

Isle of Wight district health authority and family health services authority expenditure 1994–95

Category of expenditure	Amount £
DISTRICT HEALTH AUTHORITY EXPENDITURE:
Healthcare and related services purchased:
Mental handicap	2,679,000

Thalidomide

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how many patients and in which areas the drug thalidomide has been prescribed in the last five years. [17391]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines have been issued to hospital trusts about the purchasing of the drug thalidomide from abroad; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [17406]

Mr. Malone: There are no guidelines specifically relating to the purchase of the drug thalidomide from abroad. Decisions made by national health service trusts on the purchase of drugs to meet patients' needs and on the most appropriate source of supply, are made with the input of clinicians and pharmacists, in accordance with the Medicines Acts 1968 and 1971. "Guidance on thalidomide" was published by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Medicines Control Agency in the May 1994 issue of "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance" a drug safety bulletin which is circulated to all doctors, dentists, pharmacists and coroners. This guidance note strongly advised all doctors considering the use of thalidomide to follow detailed external guidelines on the clinical use and distribution of thalidomide which were published in a widely available medical journal. A reminder was published in July 1995. Copies of both the May 1994 document and that of July 1995 are available in the Library.

"Mental Health and Stress in the Work Place"

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the booklet "Mental Health and Stress in the Work Place" to be published. [17425]

Mr. Bowis: This is not a departmental publication.

Nottingham Health Authority

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be announcing the new membership of Nottingham health authority. [17695]

Mr. Malone: The names of the non-executive members appointed to the proposed new health authorities will shortly be announced by the appropriate regional office of the national health service executive.

South Birmingham Health Authority

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of funding allocated to South Birmingham health authority in respect of VAT liability in the current financial year; and what it has been in each of the past three years. [17771]

Mr. Horam: There is no separate allocation of funds in respect of value added tax liability.

Emergency Hospital Admissions (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were refused emergency medical admission to a hospital in the Greater London area during 1995. [17787]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available. Patients have the right to get emergency treatment from the national health service at any time.

Continuing Health Care

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the key results of the NHS executive-social services inspectorate's monitoring of the implementation of the guidance on NHS responsibilities for meeting continuing health care; and if he will make a statement. [18076]

Mr. Bowis: We have recently written to health and local authorities outlining the key results of the monitoring work carried out by the national health service executive and social services inspectorate and highlighting recommendations for further action. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library.

The monitoring work suggests that the majority of health authorities have made good progress in preparing to implement the guidance. This has been effective where health and local authorities have worked together closely. There are also issues on which progress in some parts of the country has been less encouraging. We have indicated our commitment to ensuring that these issues are addressed.

Work on continuing health care will continue to be a priority for the NHS during 1996–97 and beyond to ensure the full implementation of the guidance. Health authorities, working closely with local authorities, will need to monitor closely the impact of their eligibility criteria and to develop further services to meet continuing health care needs. The letter highlights the key priorities for further work. The NHS executive and social services inspectorate will continue to monitor implementation closely and will make further reports on progress in due course.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16823]

Mr. Horam: The non-departmental public bodies which

Publish annual reports are:

(i) Under a statutory requirement:

English National Board of Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority.

(ii) Voluntarily:

Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work

Medical Practices Committee

National Biological Standards Board

National Radiological Protection Board

Public Health Laboratory Service Board.

Patient Admissions

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what are his Department's guidelines for the admission of gynaecology and psychiatric patients through casualty units in hospitals where there is no registrar appointed for either of these specialities; and what recommendations are made by his Department for proper differential diagnosis to be made in such cases for admission or discharge of patients; [17404]

(2) what guidelines exist for admitting patients where there is one registrar to deal with that patient's problems; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [17405]

Mr. Horam: There is no central guidance. Procedures for admitting patients to hospital are determined in accordance with local arrangements.

Health Economics Consortiums

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many health economics consortiums have been set up in the United Kingdom; what capital the Government have allocated to these units; what is their remit and to whom they are accountable; and how many district health authorities, or other public bodies, have commissioned reports on service provision from these units. [17403]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 7 February 1996, Official Report, column 270.

NHS Charges

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the revenue from NHS charges for (a) prescriptions, (b) dental services, (c) dental examinations and (d) eye tests in (i) 1978–79 and (ii) 1995. [17823]

Mr. Malone: The information available for the last full year is given in the table:

Revenue from national health service charges—£ million, cash terms

Income from	1978–79	1994–95
Prescription charges	24.2	287.2
Dental charges (for general dental services)	55.4	[1]383.3
Dental examinations	[2]0	[2]60.0
NHS eye tests	[3]0	[3]0

[1] Includes patient charge income from dental examinations.[2] No patient charges for dental examinations were levied before 1 January 1989. The figure for 1994–95 is an estimate, as patients pay charges on the basis of their whole course of treatment and the amount paid in respect of individual procedures is not separately recorded.

[3] There is no charge for the provision of NHS sight tests. Since April 1989 entitlement to NHS sight tests has been restricted to certain priority groups, including children and those on low income. People not entitled to an NHS test now pay for a private sight test.

ENVIRONMENT

Owner-occupiers

16. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many owner-occupiers there were (a) at the latest available date and (b) in 1979. [15502]

Mr. Curry: The number of owner-occupied dwellings in Great Britain in 1979 was 11,348,000, and in December 1994 the number had grown to 15,807,000.

Homelessness

17. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional measures he proposes to combat homelessness. [15503]

Mr. Curry: The Housing Bill includes measures to prevent homelessness by ensuring that housing advice is available and that long-term social housing tenancies are allocated to households with the greatest underlying need.

Energy Conservation

18. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with local authorities on the implementation of the Home Energy Conservation Act 1995; and if he will make a statement. [15504]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The implementation of the Act was discussed by the Central and Local Government Environment Forum on 6 December. The local authority associations were represented on the working group established to consider guidance on the Act. Guidance for England will be issued very shortly; all English district and metropolitan authorities, and many other interested bodies, had the opportunity to comment on a draft.

Rural White Paper

19. Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has received to the publication of the rural White Paper; and if he will make a statement. [15505]

Mr. Gummer: We have received well over 500 written responses to the various policies and proposals in the rural White Paper. In addition, Ministers and officials have participated in a large number of conferences and seminars which have been arranged across England to discuss the White Paper.

Air Quality

20. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding air quality. [15506]

Mr. Clappison: This year, my ministerial colleagues and I have received a number of letters from Members of Parliament and the public concerning air quality.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

21. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement. [15507]

Sir Paul Beresford: In 1994 and 1995, Parliament approved orders under the Local Government Act 1988 which added legal, construction and property, financial, personnel and information technology services to the compulsory competitive tendering regime. CCT for these services is being introduced under a implementation timetable which begins in 1996 and continues to 2000.

Our priority, a present, is the successful implementation of CCT for the existing range of CCT activities and we currently have no proposals to add to the list of activities.

Local Government Reorganisation

22. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extra costs that local authorities will face as a result of his decision to delay local government reorganisation. [15508]

Mr. Curry: I do not expect that a delay in the date for any particular reorganisation should affect its cost.

Housing Management Contracts

23. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial assistance is available from his Department to local authorities when they are required to re-run the tender process for housing management contracts. [15509]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Negative Equity and Repossession

24. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of home owners who will (a) experience negative equity and (b) undergo repossession in 1996. [15510]

Mr. Curry: The Government do not make such forecasts. Home owners will continue to benefit from the Government's economic policies, which have made home ownership more affordable than for many years.

Anti-social Tenants

25. Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his proposals to help local authorities deal more effectively with anti-social tenants. [15511]

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to help local authorities deal with anti-social tenants. [15498]

Mr. Clappison: The Government have included in the Housing Bill a substantial package of measures to help local authorities to deal more effectively with anti-social tenants. That package will also assist housing associations and private landlords.

Private Finance Initiative

26. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what contribution he expects the private finance initiative to make to the capital programme of local authorities. [15512]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government have created opportunities for local authorities to use the private finance initiative to achieve increased levels of investment in upgrading and developing the services that they offer.

Environment Agency

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total number of employees (a) in the National Rivers Authority at its disestablishment and (b) in the Environment Agency at its launch. [15513]

Mr. Clappison: There are 7,420 full-time equivalent posts in the National Rivers Authority. The equivalent number for the Environment Agency from 1 April 1996 is expected to be a little over 9,100—the agency will inherit the functions and staff of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution as well as those of the National Rivers Authority.

Local Authority Services

28. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet representatives of the GMB union to discuss the provision of local authority services. [15514]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Rents-to-mortgages Scheme

29. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the take-up of the rents-to-mortgages scheme in 1996. [15515]

Mr. Clappison: My Department has made no estimate of future sales.

Domestic Heating

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the local grant finance settlement for 1996–97 makes allowance for the differing amounts of fuel required to heat identical properties throughout Britain on the basis of the Building Research Establishment domestic energy model. [16063]

Sir Paul Beresford: The main use of the Building Research Establishment domestic energy model is a design tool for comparing the energy consumption of different building designs. It would therefore be inappropriate to include it in the formulae for distributing revenue support grant.

Married Quarters Estate

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of the housing corporations' budget is being earmarked for the (a) acquisition and (b) rehabilitation of properties belonging to the Ministry of Defence married quarters estate which are currently being offered for sale. [16390]

Mr. Curry: None of the budget is being earmarked. Housing associations will be entitled to bid competitively for funds to assist with the acquisition and rehabilitation of MOD property, on the same basis as for other property, if the schemes proposed meet the housing corporations' criteria.

Telecommunications Masts

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many telecommunications masts were erected in (i) 1993, (ii) 1994, (iii) 1995 and (iv) to date. [16403]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not collected centrally.

Thefts

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 533, what additional information is available in respect of the nature, number and value of items of Health and Safety Executive equipment lost in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1995–96 to date. [16712]

Sir Paul Beresford: I am able to provide the following information about the nature, number and value of HSE equipment lost in 1993–94 and 1995–96 to date:

Cost £ (purchase price)

	1993–94		1995–96 to date
Nature of equipment	Amount stolen	Amount unaccounted for	Amount stolen	Amount unaccounted for
Computer equipment	6,502	43,860	37,352	0
Scientific equipment	6,277	344,271	0	0
Photographic equipment	20,769	526	0	0
Other equipment	6,163	96,138	0	0
Totals	39,711	484,795	37,352	0
Photographic equipment later recovered	17,036	—	—	—

During 1993 and 1994, the HSE mounted special exercises to verify the existence of its assets. These revealed that a number of items had been disposed of over preceding years, many at the end of their lives, without formal documentation, so could not be accounted for. At the time of the loss, these items had little, or no, historic net book value—so the loss suffered was much less than the purchase price shown.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the successful bids under round 2 of the single regeneration budget by region and value of grant. [17364]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested was placed in the Library of the House and circulated to hon. Members on 12 December 1995. I have sent further copies to the hon. Member.

High-voltage Power Cables

Mr. Williams O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to issue planning guidance notes to local authorities on building near to high-voltage power lines; and if he will make a statement. [17127]

Sir Paul Beresford: The National Radiological Protection Board, which advises the Government, local authorities and industry on these matters, has already issued guidance on the known health effects of proximity to high-voltage cables and other sources of electromagnetic fields. The board will not hesitate to give further advice on protection if the scientific evidence indicates that it is necessary.

Cement Kilns (Pollution)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which member states of the European Union allow the burning of secondary liquid fuels in cement kilns with limits on the emission of particulates and other products of combustion more restrictive than those which apply in the United Kingdom. [17696]

Mr. Clappison: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution wrote to member states in the European Union in 1994 requesting information on the emission regulations applicable to cement plants burning secondary liquid fuels. The response was poor and consequently this information is not available.

Housing Associations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the number of housing association homes for rent which will be constructed in 1996–97; and what is his estimate for funding levels for 1996–97. [15484]

Mr. Clappison: Estimates of funding for housing associations and the number of homes that they will provide in 1996–97 have recently been published by the Housing Corporation as part of the approved development programme. Public funding for the ADP during the year will be £1,062.8 million, including £40 million receipts, of which some £786.7 million will be used to provide homes for rent. In addition, schemes funded through the ADP are expected to attract some £827 million of private finance.

The ADP is expected to provide around 28,000 housing association homes for rent during 1996–97 through new build and rehabilitation. Funding from the ADP, local authorities and other sources is expected to provide a total of around 60,000 additional social lettings for rent or shared ownership in 1996–97.

Cremations and Burials

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment if he will make a statement on his meeting on the re-use of graves and problems of cremation and burial with Reverend Dr. Peter Tupp, Lord Young of Dartington and other representatives of the National Funerals college. [15750]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Secretary of State has not met representatives from the National Funerals college because policy responsibility for matters relating to burial and cremation rests with the Home Office. He did, however, meet the Rev. Dr. Peter Jupp on 5 February as part of a delegation representing the Churches' Group on Funeral Services at Cemeteries and Crematoria. The meeting was held to discuss issues relating to the potential sale of local authority crematoriums. The Secretary of State told the delegation that he hoped local authorities would consider the potential merits of transferring their crematoriums to the private sector and that he had provided time-limited financial measures to encourage authorities to review the position carefully. He confirmed, however, that these measures were enabling ones only, and that local authorities will have the discretion either to retain or sell their crematoriums, according to their own assessment of local needs and circumstances. The delegation said that, in its view, such decisions should take into account whether transfer to the private sector would put funeral directing businesses and crematoriums in common ownership and should have regard to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission Report on Service Corporation International (CM20880). The meeting agreed that officials from the Department and from the Churches' group should continue to liaise on issues relating to Department of the Environment's area of responsibility.

Playing Fields

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will collate figures on the number of acres of playing fields on which development has been refused; and if he will make a statement. [15752]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department does not hold information on this basis. The Sports Council is compiling a register of sports pitches under threat from proposals for development, but even this would not answer the question.

Local planning authorities have been advised, in planning policy guidance note 17(PPG17), to consider the longer-term need for playing fields, both by schools and the wider community. In addition, before allowing their development, authorities should consider proposals against policies in the local plan, including the need for public open space. Last July the Government published their sports White Paper, "Sport: Raising the Game", which makes it clear that the Government are concerned about the fate of all playing fields, not only those used by schools. The Government are currently consulting on a proposal that the Sports Council should be made a statutory consultee on planning proposals affecting all playing fields. This would ensure that local planning authorities are aware of any deficiency in playing field provision in making any decision on proposals to develop playing fields.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16821]

Sir Paul Beresford: Details of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1995". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on Tuesday 25 April 1995, Official Report, column 474. The information contained in that answer—No. 20496—remains correct with the following exceptions: Letchworth Garden city corporation ceased to be a public body on 30 September 1995 and Leeds development corporation has been wound up. The registers of members' interests of the British Board of Agreement and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee are now voluntarily available for public inspection.

Two new executive NDPBs have been established since April 1995, the Local Government Residuary Body and the Environment Agency, and my Department has taken on responsibility for the Health and Safety Commission and Executive. The new bodies and the Health and Safety Commission and Executive are statutorily required to publish annual reports and accounts. None of the new bodies publishes agendas or minutes of meetings. The Environment Agency will, like the National Rivers Authority, be under a statutory requirement to make agendas and minutes of the regional committees available to the public.

Millennium Exhibition

Sir Norman Fowler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had concerning the site of the millennium exhibition in his capacity as Minister for London; what advice he has given; and if he will make a statement. [17751]

Mr. Gummer: The case for Greenwich has been mentioned to me regularly by London organisations and individuals in the course of meetings on other issues. These are too numerous to list. Whenever the exhibition is raised, I explain that the decision is for the Millennium Commission and not for the Government.

Waste Management Licensing

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to revise the fees and charges for waste management licensing; and if he will make a statement. [17877]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Wales and for Scotland have made the Waste Management Licensing (Fees and Charges) Scheme 1996 under section 41 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The scheme has been made with the approval of the Treasury and comes into force on 1 April 1996.

In line with the "polluter pays" principle, the financial objective of the charging scheme is full recovery of the costs of supervising sites licensed under section 35 of the 1990 Act; and the cost of considering licence applications. With the aim of fulfilling this objective, the 1996 charging scheme increases subsistence charges by 15 per cent. and application fees by 2.75 per cent.

In order to reduce the effect of the introduction of charges on small businesses, we set some of them at 70 per cent. of our assessment of full cost recovery in 1994–95 and 1995–96. The abrupt ending of this transitional provision would have had a disproportionate impact on the businesses affected. We have therefore decided that the transitional provision should be retained for one year longer than was originally intended and should be set at 85 per cent. of our assessment of full cost recovery in 1996–97.

As required by section 41 of the 1990 Act, a copy of the 1996 charging scheme is being laid before the House and placed in the Library of the House.

Subsequent charging schemes for waste manage licensing will be made under sections 41 and 42 of the Environment Act 1995 on the basis of proposals submitted by the Environment Agency and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency and they will reflect the costs incurred by the agencies in their operation of the licensing system.

Landfill Tax

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of recycling credits to be paid by waste disposal authorities following the introduction of the landfill tax. [17923]

Mr. Clappison: Statutory payments, which are made by waste disposal and waste collection authorities to those who recycle waste, are commonly known as "recycling credits". These payments are made under section 52 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and associated regulations.

Payments of credits are intended to reflect savings in the costs of waste collection and disposal which benefit collection and disposal authorities, as a direct result of the activities of recyclers. In particular, disposal credits, which are paid by waste disposal authorities, represent the net saving of expenditure on the disposal of waste, which arises because the waste has been recycled.

Provisions to introduce the proposed landfill tax are contained in the Finance Bill, which is currently before Parliament. The aim of the new tax is to increase the cost of landfill disposal of waste, reflecting its environmental impact. This will make alternative waste management practices, such as recycling, more economic. The landfill tax supports the objectives set out in our White Paper on waste, "Making Waste Work".

Waste disposal authorities should take their own legal advice if they are in doubt as to their position, as the interpretation of legislation is ultimately a matter for the courts. However, it is the aim of the recycling credits legislation that all expenditure on the disposal of waste should be included in the calculation of disposal credits. The amounts of disposal credits should therefore be increased to reflect the introduction, subject to parliamentary approval, of the landfill tax, where landfill is the most expensive disposal method as defined by the regulations.

OECD Environment Ministers' Meeting

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the outcome of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Environment Ministers' meeting in Paris on 19 and 20 February; and if he will make a statement. [17924]

Mr. Gummer: I was elected to chair the meeting of OECD Environment Ministers in Paris on 19 and 20 February. This was in recognition of the UK's international environmental leadership, including our key role in last year's Berlin conference on climate change and Vienna conference on the ozone layer, and further acknowledged by the invitation to me from the Secretary-General of the United Nations to join the international advisory group of eminent persons preparing for this year's habitat II conference in Istanbul.

The meeting marked the 25th anniversary of the setting up of the OECD's environment policy committee and the first occasion that a British Minister had taken the chair. The meeting provided an opportunity both to review past performance and to decide the priorities for future action, particularly in the context of the 1997 special session of the General Assembly of the United Nations to follow up the 1992 Rio earth summit.

There was acceptance at the meeting of the need for OECD countries to show leadership in resolving global environmental problems both through domestic action and by assisting developing and transition economies to take action themselves.

The meeting endorsed OECD acts on the "greening" of Governments and the OECD itself, and on pollutant release and transfer registers. Ministers also adopted a declaration on lead risk reduction and supported the principle of opening up OECD instruments on the mutual acceptance of chemicals data to non-OECD countries.

Ministers called for reports from the OECD, to be prepared over the next one to two years, on the relationship between globalisation and environmental policies, on the environmental effects of subsidies and tax disincentives, and on green tax reform.

I was able to draw upon the UK's strong environmental performance. I pressed the importance of the annual environmental audit contained in the White Paper which we have published every year since the first comprehensive environmental strategy "This Common Inheritance" in 1990.

The whole government machine is brought into process, not least through the Green Ministers machinery. This experience enabled the United Kingdom to be the first country to publish all the action plans called for at the 1992 Rio earth summit—a comprehensive strategy for sustainable development and action programmes for climate change, biodiversity and forests.

This strategy included the setting up of the Government panel and the UK round table on sustainable development and the "Going for Green" campaign. We have now produced detailed strategies for waste and air quality, thus setting for the first time clear targets and providing effective monitoring. This radical approach has been carried through to our preparation of the world's first set of indicators of sustainable development and pioneering work on recommendations for costed biodiversity targets.

The Environment Act 1995 set up environment agencies for England and Wales and for Scotland. The Government's commitment to work with the market to achieve environmental progress has been shown by various economic instruments such as the 1994 Budget introduction of a new landfill tax which shifts the burden of taxation to discourage harmful activities; our pledge to increase the duty on road fuels on average by at least 5 per cent. each year in real terms in future budgets; and the 15 per cent. reduction in the duty on road fuel gases made in the 1995 budget, bringing their price broadly into line with that of petrol and diesel. These are all examples of fiscal measures taken for environmental purposes.

Our strategy also includes voluntary measures such as the EC eco-management and audit scheme, where the UK has become the first country to register sites. A major review of radioactive waste management policy was completed last year and later this year we shall become one of the first countries in Europe to publish an Environmental health action plan. The environment White Paper to be published at the end of March will highlight major achievements in 1995 and identify key new initiatives for the coming year.

By combining effective government machinery, detailed targets and monitoring, and clear strategies covering the whole environmental agenda, the United Kingdom is now widely recognised as one of the global leaders on sustainable development.

Yorkshire Water

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when and by whom he was first informed that approval had been given to Yorkshire Water to increase charges; what subsequent representations he has made to the director general of Ofwat on this matter; what information he requested from the director as to the grounds on which he gave approval for the increase; and if he will make a statement. [16835]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Yorkshire Water's price limits, together with the price limits for all the water companies, were set by the Director General of Water Services in his thorough quinquennial review, the outcome of which was announced by the director general in July 1994. Two companies subsequently sought a referral of their new price limits to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. In its reports, the MMC largely endorsed the director general's approach and his determinations. I am satisfied therefore that the director general's review was properly and carefully carried out. Yorkshire Water's average charge increase from April 1996 is within the price limit set by the director-general.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make representations to those responsible for Yorkshire Water's commission of inquiry that its terms of reference should include Yorkshire Water's pricing policy. [16836]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Professor Uff has been asked by Yorkshire Water to conduct an inquiry into the water supply situation in Yorkshire. The terms of reference of the inquiry are a matter for Professor Uff.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when members of his Department met Professor John Uff, in respect of Yorkshire Water's commission of inquiry; and on what occasions pricing policy was discussed. [16798]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I have met Professor John Uff. Professor Uff has also had contact with officials, who referred him to the framework of price regulation and the regulator's decisions in his quinquennial review in 1994.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not met Professor Uff. This corrects the error in the answer my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary gave on 22 February, Official Report, column 282. I regret this error.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the director general of Ofwat to withdraw his approval to Yorkshire Water increasing its charges pending the outcome of (a) his departmental review of Yorkshire Water and (b) Yorkshire Water's commission of inquiry. [16799]

Mr. Curry [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The Director General of Water Services has responsibility for determining the limits on water companies' charge increases. Yorkshire Water's average charge increase of 5.6 per cent. from April 1996 is within the price limit set by the director general.

My Department is not conducting a review of Yorkshire Water.

Groundwater Levels, London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what estimate he has made of the changes in groundwater levels in London; what assessment he has made of the implications for such changes for the London Underground and for buildings; and if he will make a statement; [16913]

(2) what research his Department has commissioned into groundwater levels in London; if he will publish the results of such research; and what action he has taken as a result of such research; [16914]

(3) what assessment he has made of the NRA Thames region report on rising groundwater levels in the chalk-basal sands aquifer of the central London basin as it affects possible flooding in London; and if he will make a statement; [16962]

(4) what assessment he has made of the possible damage to buildings from rising groundwater levels in London; [16963]

(5) what representations he has received from (a) London Underground Ltd. and (b) others regarding rising groundwater levels in London; [16964]

(6) what estimate he has made of the costs of addressing rising groundwater levels in London by (a) regional control using purpose-built wells, (b) regional control using existing wells, (c) local control by building and landowners on an ad hoc basis and (d) structural modifications to prevent damage coupled with local control as in (c); and what estimate he has made of the costs of taking no such actions; [16965]

(7) what action he has taken to ensure that the design and building of new structures in London takes account of possible future groundwater levels. [16966]

Mr. Clappison [holding answers 26 February 1996]: A report, "The engineering implications of rising groundwater levels in the deep aquifer beneath London", was published by the Construction Industry Research and Information Association in May 1989, funded in part by the Department. It reported on groundwater levels in London, rates of change of groundwater levels, locations where problems with deep structures and buildings could occur, the time scale over which problems could arise and the cost implications of a range of control procedures.

The National Rivers Authority, at the request of the Department, has monitored groundwater levels in London since 1989, and reported annually. These reports have been distributed to many organisations including London Underground. Regular meetings are held between the National Rivers Authority, Thames Water Utilities, London Underground Ltd., the Loss Prevention Council and the Association of British Insurers and others to disseminate information. It is the responsibility of owners of existing and new structures to ensure the adequate protection of their assets.

Water Meters

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water meters were installed by water authorities and companies in domestic properties in (a) 1985, (b) 1990 and (c) 1995. [17365]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The number of water meters installed in domestic properties is as follows:

	Households
1990–91	[1]315,000
1995–96	[2]1,404,000

Source:

Information relating to 1985 is not available.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the officials in her Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if she will establish a register of officials' interests. [16894]

Mr. Robin Squire: Staff of the Department must declare any conflict of interest between their work and outside interests so that senior management can determine how best to proceed. This requirement is set out in the handbooks of the former Education and Employment Departments and will be reflected in the guidance that is currently being produced for the new Department for Education and Employment.

A central register is not kept. Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer.

Schools Expenditure (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent in total on school education in Durham, in each year since 1979. [17210]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows in cash and 1995 prices gross expenditure for pre-primary, primary and secondary education by Durham local education authority from 1979–80 to 1993–94, the latest year for which figures are available. These figures have not been adjusted for any changes of function.

Gross expenditure on schools—Durham county council

£ million

	Cash terms	Real terms
1979–80	64.426	161.000
1980–81	78.888	166.613
1981–82	85.288	164.243

Staff-student Ratios (Universities)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the average staff-student ratios in (a) the arts, (b) social science, and (d) applied science departments in British universities. [17744]

Mr. Forth: Information for the higher education institutions formerly funded by the Universities Funding Council in Great Britain is contained in the publication "University Management Statistics and Performance Indicators in the UK" published by the Universities Statistical Record. Statistics for the higher education institutions formerly funded by the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council for England have been published by the Higher Education Funding Council for England in "Student Staff Ratios in polytechnics and colleges". Copies of both publications are in the House Library.

Teachers (Kirklees)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the total amount paid by Kirklees metropolitan council on behalf of its teachers to the teachers; superannuation scheme during 1994–95. [17604]

Mr. Robin Squire: The total amount paid in pension contributions to the teachers' superannuation scheme by Kirklees metropolitan borough council during 1994–95 was £5,566,102.

Teachers' Pay

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what impact the teachers' pay settlement will have on education spending in the 1996–97 settlement. [15486]

Mr. Robin Squire: The impact on the pay award will depend on the decisions made by local authorities when they determine their budgets for services, including education, for 1996–97.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many civil servants her Department employs to oversee and monitor the activities of the training and enterprise councils; and what is their annual cost. [17747]

Mr. Paice: The Department currently employs 238 civil servants in Government offices whose work is principally about overseeing and monitoring the activities of training and enterprise councils. In 1995–96, the estimated cost of these staff is £6.4 million.

Consultants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each of the last five years (a) the total spent on consultants and (b) the work carried out by consultants. [17748]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

School Buildings

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to lay guidelines for the governors of maintained schools in respect of standard of premises not within the statute's requirements of the draft school building regulations laid on 22 February. [17816]

Mrs. Gillan: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs) on 22 February 1996, Official Report, column 245–46.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to what school regulations nursery schools or other under-fives provisions in (a) maintained, (b) voluntary and (c) private establishments (i) are now subject and (ii) will be subject if the draft schools regulations laid on 22 February are approved by Parliament. [17817]

Mrs. Gillan: Nursery schools, nursery classes and reception classes in the maintained sector are subject to the Education (School Premises) Regulation 1981 and, subject to the approval of Parliament, will become subject to the Education (Schools Premises) Regulations 1996 from 1 September 1996, when the 1981 regulations will be revoked.

Nursery schools and other under-fives provision outside the maintained sector are subject to other legislation—in particular, the Children Act 1989. Such provision falls within the scope of neither the School Premises Regulations 1981, nor the new 1996 regulations.

Special Educational Needs Tribunal

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many applications there have been annually to the special educational needs tribunal since its establishment; and how many have been (a) accepted and (b) rejected. [17331]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 26 February 1996]: A total of 1,170 appeals were registered with the special educational needs tribunal between 1 September 1994 and 31 August 1995. The average time taken to dispose of these was within the tribunal's five-month target. A total of 242 appeals were disposed of by 31 August 1995. Of these, 112 were upheld, 85 were dismissed, 27 were dismissed or upheld in part, 11 were remitted to the local education authority for reconsideration and seven were struck out because they were outside the tribunal's jurisdiction.

Further details about the numbers of appeals for this period can be obtained from the SEN tribunal President's annual report, a copy of which is in the Library.

I have asked the President of the tribunal to write to the hon. Member with up-to-date figures for appeals.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the annual cost to public funds of the special educational needs tribunal. [17326]

Mrs. Gillan [holding reply 26 February 1996]: The figure for the actual cost in the financial year ending 31 March 1996 is not yet available, but we estimate that expenditure in that year will be in the region of £1,400,000.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisons (Health Care)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what percentage of the total annual budget for prisons in Northern Ireland is designated for health care; [16708]

(2) what provision is available to prisoners in Northern Ireland for therapeutic and psychological follow-up in the case of positive results in tests for transmissible diseases; [16692]

(3) what policies the prison service in Northern Ireland has concerning the prevention of transmissible or contagious diseases (a) in general and (b) in respect of particular outbreaks; [16680]

(4) what specific provisions are made of those prisoners in Northern Ireland known to be terminally ill; [16706]

(5) how many nurses and doctors are employed in the prison service in Northern Ireland per 100 inmates; [16690]

(6) how many prisoners in prisons in Northern Ireland are currently known to be terminally ill; and what are the causes of the terminal illnesses; [16705]

(7) what regular medical checks prisoners in prison in Northern Ireland receive; and what systematic checks are carried out for transmissible diseases; [16689]

(8) what steps are taken to prevent discrimination against prisoners in Northern Ireland with specific health problems; [16707]

(9) how many prisoners died in prison in Northern Ireland in each year since 1992; and of these deaths how many were (a) self-inflicted, (b) accidental, (c) homicides, (d) due to disease, (e) due to AIDS, (f) due to tuberculosis (g) due to cancer and (h) due to vascular and heart diseases; [16679]

(10) what steps are taken to ensure the confidentiality of medical checks on prisoners in Northern Ireland, including where a case of a transmissible disease is identified. [16691]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for reply to be given.

Letter from A. D. Shannon to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 26 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Questions in which you ask:

(i) the percentage of the total annual budget for prisons in Northern Ireland that is designated for health care;

(ii) the provision available to prisoners in Northern Ireland for therapeutic and psychological follow up in the case of positive results in tests for transmissible diseases;

(iii) the policy of the Northern Ireland Prison Service in relation to the prevention of transmissible and contagious diseases;

(iv) the provisions that are made for terminally ill prisoners in Northern Ireland;

(v) the number of nurses and doctors employed within the Northern Ireland Prison Service per 100 inmates;

(vi) the number of terminally ill prisoners in Northern Ireland and the cause of the illness;

(vii) what regular medical checks prisons in Northern Ireland receive and what systematic checks are carried out for transmissible diseases;

(viii) the steps taken to prevent discrimination against prisoners in Northern Ireland with specific health problems;

(ix) the number of prisoners who have died in prison in Northern Ireland in each year since 1992 and the cause of death in each case;

(x) the steps taken to ensure the confidentiality of medical checks on prisoners in Northern Ireland, including where a case of transmissible disease is identified.

The health care element of the Prison Service budget in 1995/96 is £1.1 million, which is slightly less than 1% of he overall budget of £143 million.

A prisoner diagnosed as suffering from a transmissible disease has access to a Consultant Physician with the required specialist. Where necessary, psychiatric and psychology services are provided by two part-time Consultant Psychiatrists and four full-time Psychologists.

The policy on the management of transmissible or contagious diseases depends largely on the condition involved. There is a written policy for the management of patients with HIV or Hepatitis B infection. Prison Medical Officers would take advice on managing outbreaks of infectious diseases from Consultants in Communicable Disease Control within Health and Personal Social Services Boards in Northern Ireland.

Prisoners who are diagnosed as having a terminal illness will have access to those provisions made available to members of the public by Health and Personal Social Services Boards.

Health care facilities for prisoners are provided by five full-time and two part-time medical officers and nine full-time and two part-time nursing staff. In addition, General Practitioner Practices provide support at three prison establishments in Northern Ireland. All these are employed by the Department of Health and Social Services. Health care staff are supplemented by 44 prison grade hospital officers. On 22 February 1996 the prison population was 1593 prisoners.

There are no terminally ill prisoners currently in prisons in Northern Ireland.

Prisoners have access to a doctor on a daily basis. They are medically screened on admission to prison, before a court appearance, transfer, discharge and disciplinary hearing. Regular medical checks are carried out on those deemed to require further attention. There are no routine systematic checks carried out for transmissible diseases.

All prisoners are integrated, where appropriate, into a normal location including those with specific health problems. Prison Rules in Northern Ireland permit Medical Officers to separate from other prisons any prisoner whose health makes such separation advisable in his own interest or that of other prisoners. Prisoners' medical conditions are treated as Medical in Confidence at all times.

Medical Officers to separate from other prisoners any prisoner whose health makes such separation advisable in his own interest or that of other prisoners. Prisoners' medical conditions are treated as Medical in Confidence at all times.

Nine prisoners have died in prison on Northern Ireland since 1992. Six of the deaths occurred in 1994—three were self-inflicted, two died from cancer and one from heart disease. Three deaths occurred in 1995—two were self-inflicted and one prisoner died from septicaemia.

Prisoners' medical records are held in a confidential file within a secure cabinet in the prison health care centre; the same rules of confidentiality are applied as for the general public.

Census Data

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the 1991 census data will be available on the basis of the new parliamentary constituencies in Northern Ireland. [16458]

Sir John Wheeler: On current plans, 1991 census data population counts for the new parliamentary constituencies will be available in September 1996.

Promotional Events

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how expenditure by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on promotional events will be funded. [18073]

Mr. Moss: During the year 1995–96, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has undertaken the lead role in funding work promoting the image of Northern Ireland, including certain events geared to that objective. Recently, the Department has concluded that the legislation under which this policy was hitherto considered to give vires to work implemented does not in fact support funding for every element of the programme, and hence some expenditure has been incurred without legislative cover. Parliamentary approval for the extra-statutory elements of the programme is being sought in a supplementary estimate for the environmental and other services vote (Department of the Environment, vote 4). Pending that approval, urgently needed expenditure will be met by repayable advances from the civil contingencies fund. As I wish this valuable work to continue, I am reviewing arrangements for implementing the programme and also examining the possibility of seeking Parliament's approval of new legislation which would specifically authorise such expenditure.

Rate Collection Agency

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the future of the Rate Collection Agency. [18074]

Mr. Moss: Following the announcement on 22 June 1995 about the outcome of the Evaluation and Review of the agency, the revised framework document setting out the policy and resources framework within which the agency will operate, pending the market test of its functions, has now been approved. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament.

NNEB Courses

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many students at further education colleges studying Nursery Nurses Education Board courses have had a reduction in their grants in the current academic year; [16264]

(2) if he will take steps to resolve outstanding problems in relation to the funding of NNEB courses at colleges of further education; [16265]

(3) if he will instruct education and library boards to honour their full maintenance and tuition grant commitment to students studying NNEB courses at further education colleges. [16266]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Some 56 students studying National Nursery Examination Board courses at further education colleges have had a reduction in their grants in the current academic year. On 20 February, my Department approved an amendment to the discretionary awards arrangements which will enable education and library boards to pay full grant to these students. I am not aware of any problems in relation to the funding of these courses at colleges.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expenditure has been incurred by health authorities in Northern Ireland for the purchase of electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years. [17012]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 26 February 1996]: None.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor wheelchairs by health authorities in each of the last three years. [17017]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The numbers of people provided with such wheelchairs is as follows:

1992–93: 143

1994–95: 305

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair; [17014]

(2) what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor wheelchair. [17185]

Mr. Moss [holding answers 26 February 1996]: The cost would depend on individual circumstances and the type of chair supplied.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expenditure has been incurred by health authorities for the purchase of electrically powered indoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years. [171891]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The information requested is as follows

1992–93: £63,152

1993–94: £23,225

1994–95: £112.189

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs by health authorities in each of the last three years. [17194]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 26 February 1996]: None.

WALES

Nursery Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for (a) each Welsh county and (b) Wales the numbers of children receiving nursery school education and the proportion those children represent of the total number of children of pre-school age for each of the last three available years. [16287]

Mr. Richards: The information is in the tables.

[1] At January each year. Aged at 31 December (estimated). Data includes both full-time and part-time pupils in nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools as a proportion of the mid-year population estimates for children aged three and four-years-old. Pupils in ordinary classes in maintained primary schools, special and independent schools are excluded.

Nursery Education

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the likely change in the number of children receiving nursery education and the corresponding proportion of those children as a percentage of the total number of children of pre-school age for each county and for Wales as a whole in consequence of the introduction of the proposed nursery voucher scheme; and if he will make a statement. [16288]

Mr. Richards: The voucher scheme is intended to enhance current levels of provision and stimulate greater choice for parents in the maintained, voluntary and private sectors. No estimate has been made of the actual number of four-year-olds who will take up places under the scheme—that will depend on parental choice and the availability of places; but numbers are expected to be no less than at present.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16819]

Mr. Hague:

(a) All—under statue, charter or other controlling documents. The report of work by the Agricultural Wages Committee is included in the annual report of the Agricultural Wages Board;

(b) all except the Royal Commission on Ancient and Historical Monuments in Wales and the Agricultural Wages Committee—under statue or charter;

(c) none;

(d) none;

(e) all have adopted or are in the process of adopting a code of practice based on the code of best practice for board members of public bodies published by Her Majesty's Treasury in June 1994, and publish or will then publish or make available such a register.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his current estimate of the outturn cost of the Cardiff bay barrage. [17461]

Mr. Hague: I have asked the corporation to contain total expenditure on the barrage project within the cost figure announced to Parliament. The current estimated outturn cost is therefore £191 million.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, at column 56, if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the investigating team into the management and finances of the South East Wales ambulance trust. [17350]

Mr. Hague: I will make arrangements for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he proposes to announce (a) the appointment of new board and (b) the re-appointment of existing board members to the South East Wales ambulance trust. [17245]

Mr. Hague: The appointment of executive directors is a matter for the trust. The terms of appointment of two non-executive directors are due to expire on 30 April 1996. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 88, if he will give the dates on which his Department expressed concern to the South East Wales ambulance trust in relation to its financial problem; if the concern was expressed in writing; if he will place in the Library copies of any such expressions in writing; and if he will make a statement. [17351]

Mr. Hague: My Department has maintained close contact with the trust since its financial problems became apparent, including monthly monitoring of the trust's financial performance, meetings between officials and staff at the trust and frequent correspondence. The director of the Welsh Office Health Directorate met the former chairman of the trust on three separate occasions, 27 March 1995; 30 August 1995 and 7 December 1995. He attended a meeting of the trust board on 21 December 1995 to discuss its financial performance.

Unspent Balances

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total amount of unspent balances held by general practitioner fundholders or by family health service authorities on their behalf at the latest available date (a) in the whole of Wales and (b) by family health service authority separately. [17354]

Mr. Hague: The information, as at 31 March 1995, is as follows:

FHSA	£000
Clwyd	1,115
Dyfed	692
Gwent	2,753

Ysbyty Gwynedd NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he had had with the chairman of the Ysbyty Gwynedd NHS trust in relation to the suspension of the medical director. [17410]

Mr. Hague: None. The medical director has not been suspended.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what reports he has had from the chairman of the Ysbyty Gwynedd NHS trust concerning allegations of fraud. [17409]

Mr. Hague: I have received no formal reports. The chairman of the trust is in contact with my officials about allegations of fraud.

Departmental Report

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he proposes to publish the departmental report for 1996–97. [17242]

Mr. Hague: The 1996 Welsh Office departmental report, covering the 1995–96 financial year, will be published on 25 March 1996. No date has been decided for the publication of next year's report.

Emergency Medical Admissions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of his statement of 21 February on the priority for placement of emergency medical admissions and its impact on elective surgery bed availability. [17243]

Mr. Richards: My comments on the response of NHS trusts to the demand for emergency admissions were made at the launch of the 1996 patients charter.

My main message was that hospitals should not refuse to admit emergency cases unless all beds, other than child and maternity beds, are full.

This is in line with the recommendations of the emergency admissions action plan developed by senior health authority and trust staff.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the present Cardiff and Vale of Glamorgan community health councils about the future separation of the administration of the two councils; and what advice he has given about the appointment procedures to be adopted for staff in the event of separate administrative arrangements being implemented. [17244]

Mr. Hague: Consultations with both councils have led to agreement in principle to the possible separation of administrative functions, provided no additional costs are involved.

The Welsh Health Common Services Authority, the employing body, has asked existing staff from both councils whether they want to be considered for the possible chief officer posts.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he last requested figures from the Welsh training and enterprise councils as to the levels of their reserves and their latest estimate of year-end balances; and if he will make a statement on the estimated total figure for end-year unspent balances. [17355]

Mr. Hague: TECs in Wales provide my Department on a quarterly basis with current and projected year-end reserve levels. The latest figures, which reflect income and expenditure to 31 December 1995, were received in February.

My officials are currently in discussion with Welsh TECs about the projected year-end position in the light of developments during the final quarter of the financial year.

I will write to the hon. Member when these discussions have been completed.

Planning Department (Welsh Office)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the last three years the numbers of staff in each grade and in total employed in the planning department of his office. [17570]

Mr. Hague: The requested information can be seen in the table.

The numbers of staff in each grade employed within the Planning Division for the last three years are as follows:

	1 February 1996	1 February 1995	1 February 1994
G5	1.00	—	1.00
G6	—	1.00	1.00

MCTG2	1.00	1.00	—
CAS/AA	2.00	—	—
Total	56.57	64.97	62.47

1. The figures include staff in the Drawing Office who provide a general service to the Department but who are attached to Planning Division.

2. The figures do not include Planning Inspectorate staff in Wales.

3. Work on National Parks and related areas was transferred to Planning Division in May 1994 and to Environment Division in December 1995.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16825]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Lord Chancellor's Department sponsors two such bodies: the Legal Aid Board and the Authorised Conveyancing Practitioners Board. However, the latter has been inactive since March 1992, when the Lord Chancellor announced his decision to postpone implementation of the authorised practitioners scheme.

The Legal Aid Board publishes annual reports which are laid before Parliament. Annual accounts are included in that report, as is information about the background of board members. The board does not publish the agendas or minutes of meetings of the board or its committees. There are statutory requirements for the board to publish information as to the discharge of its functions in relation to legal aid and for the Lord Chancellor to lay before each House of Parliament a copy of every statement of accounts and report of the auditors sent to him in accordance with requirements under the Legal Aid Act 1988.

Divorce Petitions

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many petitions for divorce have been filed (a) within one year of marriage and (b) in total in each of the last 10 years; and of those petitions how many relate to marriages where one party has lived in the United Kingdom for less than two years. [17749]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executives of the Court Service and the Northern Ireland Court Service are best placed to provide answers on the Lord Chancellor's behalf. I have accordingly asked the chief executives to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mrs. Teresa Gorman, dated 27 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your Question about Divorce Petitions.

The total number of divorce petitions filed in the last ten years, for England and Wales is as follows:

1986: 179,844

1987: 182,934

1988: 182,804

1989: 184,610

1990: 191,615

1991: 179,103

1992: 189,419

1993: 184,471

1994: 175,510

1995: 173,966

Information on the number of petitions filed within one year of marriage is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. It is also not possible to say how many divorce petitions relate to marriages where one party has lived in the United Kingdom for less than two years.

Letter from H. G. Thompson to Mrs. Teresa Gorman, dated 27 February 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to write to you direct with figures extracted, in relation to Northern Ireland, on foot of the Parliamentary Question put down by you on 23 February 1996 and answered by him today.

In view of the manner in which the records are kept, it has not been possible to extract all the figures requested. As the figure for 1995 is not yet available, I have covered the 10-year period 1985–94 and the total number of petitions filed for each year within that period are as follows.

Year	Number of petitions
1985	2,007
1986	1,652
1987	1,784
1988	2,224
1989	2,407
1990	2,281
1991	2,619
1992	2,615
1993	2,716
1994	2,672
Total	22,987

It is not possible to identify the number of these which related either to marriages of less than one year in duration or to marriages where one party has lived in the United Kingdom for less than two years.

I am able to report that the number of Decrees Absolute granted in marriages of less than two years duration was a total of 96 over the same 10-year period.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Overseas Development Administration

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations were held with UN agencies before publication of the Overseas Development Administration's fundamental expenditure review and the senior management review. [16398]

Mr. Hanley: At the outset of the fundamental expenditure review exercise, a member of the FER team had discussions in New York with senior officials from the UNDP, UNICEF and with the UK Mission to the UN. Copies of the FER were passed to UN agencies on publication.

No separate discussions with UN agencies took place at the time of the senior management review, but as the SMR followed shortly after the FER, it was able to take account of the discussions and conclusions of the FER.

The FER conclusions are recommendations only. We are now considering how policies should be changed to respond to the recommendations. At present, we have no plans to withdraw from any multilateral agencies. In autumn 1996, we shall be reviewing progress of reform in UN development agencies and coming to conclusion about our future relationship with those agencies.

Ogoni People (Nigeria)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of Start for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he had made to the UN Commission on Human Rights concerning the situation of the Ogoni people of Nigeria. [16611]

Mr. Hanley: The UK co-sponsored a resolution on the human rights situation in Nigeria at the UN General Assembly in December. The resolution, which was passed by a convincing majority condemned the arbitrary execution after a flawed judicial process of Ken Saro-Wiwa and his eight co-defendants and invited the Commission on Human Rights to give urgent attention to Nigeria at its forthcoming session in March-April.

Pakistan (Afghan Refugees)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been given to the Pakistan Government to help Afghan refugees who now live in Pakistan; what form such aid has taken; and if he will make statement. [16311]

Mr. Hanley: HMG do not give bilateral aid to the Pakistan Government specifically to help Afghans resident there. However, Pakistan remains a major recipient of British aid, over £28 million in bilateral assistance having been provided in 1994–5. HMG have also provided considerable sums over the years via UN bodies and NGOs to assist the refugees.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding has been given in the current financial year by Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Pakistan to provide schooling for the children of Afghan refugees now living in Pakistan. [17158]

Mr. Hanley: No funding is currently being provided to the Pakistan Government for education costs for Afghan children resident in Pakistan.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Councillor Norman Scuplak

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what action the Director of Public Prosecutions has taken with regard to the detention of Councillor Norman Scuplak at Charles street police station on 11 January 1996; and if he will make a statement. [17569]

The Attorney-General: Following an allegation of theft made against him by a fellow councillor, Councillor Scuplak voluntarily attended Charles street police station where he was interviewed. The Leicestershire constabulary has its forwarded the results of its investigation to the Crown Prosecution Service, which will decide whether or not to institute criminal proceedings.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Officials (Interest)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirement are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16883]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes my office forms part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17305]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February 1996, Official Report, columns 589–604.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS Ltd., indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17453]

The Prime Minister: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service.

Cabinet Working Group on Iraqi Procurement

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all members of the Cabinet working group on Iraqi procurement between 25 May 1989 and 25 February 1990. [17230]

The Prime Minister: The members of the working group on Iraqi procurement were officials drawn from the Departments concerned. It is not the practice to publish the membership of official committees.

Ministerial Duties

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that conventions regulating ministerial duties are codified by legislation. [17781]

The Prime Minister: No. I believe that ministerial duties to Parliament should be supervised by Parliament.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 27 February. [15751]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Live Animal Exports

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Prime Minister if the speech by the Secretary of State for Agriculture to the annual general meeting of the Devon members of the National Farmers' Union on the export of live animals represents Government policy. [17241]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Minister set out his views on the export of live animals very clearly in his speech on 15 January. They are consistent with the views expressed in the House on previous occasions.

2001 Census

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations his office received (a) in favour of and (b) against the setting up of a census office for Wales (i) in respect of the 1991 census and (ii) in respect of the 2001 census; and if he will make a statement. [15884]

The Prime Minister: So far as I am aware, none. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 23 January 1996, Official Report, column 141.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to ensure that the format of the 2001 census forms conform with the provisions of the Welsh Language Act 1993; if he will make it his policy to consult the Welsh Language Board in preparing census forms; and if he will make a statement. [15883]

The Prime Minister: The content and format of the 2001 census form are not yet decided. However, the Registrar General will ensure that the forms conform with the Welsh Language Act 1993, consulting other bodies as required.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to include in the 2001 census a question to discover how many people throughout the United Kingdom can understand, read and write the Welsh language. [17534]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 23 January 1996, Official Report, column 141.

Hong Kong

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to meet David Tang, Jimmy Lai, Morris Nourari, Stanley Ho and Li Kash Ing during his forthcoming visit to Hong Kong. [17813]

The Prime Minister: I naturally hope to meet a broad range of business men, politicians and other opinion formers.

TREASURY

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16878]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Staff are required to inform their line manager in writing of any relevant private financial interest where this might give rise to a conflict of interest with their official dealings in their current post. These records are held by the relevant team leader while the individual is in that post. No central record is held and the Treasury does not propose to establish a central register.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total expenditure by his Department on (a) staff, (b) services, (c) offices and (d) other categories on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95. [16767]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Expenditure on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 for all categories was nil.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS Ltd., indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17458]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury currently holds no contracts with EDS.

Single Currency

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much is being allocated by the European Commission to each member state to publicise the alleged benefits of a single currency. [17543]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 7 February 1996, columns 186–87.

Income Tax

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) of 14 July 1993, Official Report, column 515–16 on the introduction of an upper limit for income tax allowances and reliefs for the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 providing calculations of the yield from restriction to the basic rate and 20p rate only for those reliefs and allowances claimed at the marginal rate; [14264]

(2) if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Hartlepool of 1 July 1993, Official Report, column 598–600 on the introduction of an upper limit for income tax allowances and reliefs for the years 1995–96 and 1996–97 providing calculations of the yield from restriction to the basic rate only for those reliefs and allowances claimed at the marginal rate. [14267]

Mr. Jack: Available analyses of the full year yields at 1995–96 and 1996–97 income levels from introducing combinations of allowance and relief limits and restrictions are given in the table. The figures do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such changes.

The estimated number of people with total allowances and reliefs in excess of these limits are as follows:

Limit £	Thousands 1995–96	1996–97

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) of 5 March 1993, Official Report, column 335, on the cumulative gain as a result of changes in income tax and national insurance since 1978–79 and 1987–88 to (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [14402]

Mr. Jack: Readily available information on the annual reduction in income tax and national insurance liability for 1995–96 and 1996–97 compared with the 1978–79 and 1987–88 indexed regimes are given in the table. They are based on projections of the 1993–94 survey of personal incomes. These comparisons are hypothetical since if an indexed version of the 1978–79 and 1987–88 tax regime had prevailed the income base would not have grown in the way it has. The effect of changes in mortgage relief cannot be included in the analysis because most mortgage interest relief is given at source and therefore is not recorded on individual tax records.

Mortgage Endowment Policies

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will require each major company with mortgage endowment policy repayment schemes which have yet to mature to conduct an audit of these policies. [17475]

Mrs. Angela Knight: If customers with mortgage endowment policy repayment schemes are concerned about the maturity value of their policy, they should discuss the situation with their insurer.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, by the top 10 companies, the sales of mortgage endowment repayment policies since 1979; and if he will indicate the value of these policies by companies for each year since 1979. [17473]

Mrs. Angela Knight: This information is not held centrally.

Self-employment

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on the piloting of a single form to give the self-employed a single notification point along the lines announced in the Government's response to the first annual report of the deregulation task force. [15678]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 20 February 1996]: The pilot of the single form to give the self-employed a single notification point for tax, national insurance contributions and VAT commenced in October 1995. The form is available from tax, social security, VAT and business link offices in the pilot area in the north of England. The pilot, which has been well received, is due to run until March 1996. The intention is then to extend the use of the form to the rest of the country. In developing the national version of the pilot, the Inland Revenue has been guided by comments from consultation with customers.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of the allocation of persons in his Department to the consideration of the Government's response to the Scott inquiry. [16572]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Access to the report itself prior to publication was restricted to a very small number of officials in my Departments, in accordance with the procedure agreed with the Scott inquiry. However, the Scott report covered a wide range of policy issues and a number of other officials contributed to preparation of the Government's response without sight of the report. It is not therefore possible to give the cost of the work.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he responded to communications received from Mr. Christopher Muttukumaru; what were the dates of letters; and if he will deposit copies in the Library. [16547]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I and my officials have responded to a number of letters from Mr. Muttukumaru, for example, about my evidence to the inquiry in February 1994. Sir Richard Scott is free to publish any document he considers to be relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. I understand that he proposes to do this as soon as possible.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what communication he received from the Secretary of the Scott inquiry, concerning the time needed by the Opposition parties to scrutinise the Scott report; on what date he received such communications; what was the nature of the contents of the letters; and if he will deposit copies of those letters in the Library. [16629]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the President of the Board of Trade on 22 February, columns 251–52.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer at what hour and minute of which day the report of the Scott inquiry was delivered to his office. [16491]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 February 1996]: At about 6 pm on Friday 9 February.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he first saw the report of the Scott Inquiry. [16581]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 22 February 1996]: On 10 February, at about 10 am.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Badgers (Tuberculosis)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of the badger TB programme in each area in each of the last five years. [16242]

Mrs. Browning: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the approximate cost of employing staff to undertake badger investigations following TB breakdowns in cattle in England for each of the last five financial years is as follows:

1991–92: £466,707

1992–93: £588,328

1993–94: £792,898

1994–95: £1,202,448

1995–96: £1,212,137—estimate

In addition, considerable resources have been allocated to research into the problem of TB in badgers and cattle. It is estimated that the Department will spend £1.48 million in the current financial year.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of administration of the blood test scheme which identifies TB in badgers since its introduction. [16243]

Mrs. Browning: The cost of using the recently developed live test for TB in badgers, from its introduction in November 1994 to date, has been approximately £536,324.

Food (Peanut Content)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that the peanut content of food is listed on the packaging; and if he will make a statement. [16302]

Mrs. Browning: The European Community's Scientific Committee for Food has recently reported on the subject of food intolerance. We expect the EC Commission to pursue revised labelling rules on the basis of this scientific opinion.

In the meantime, following discussions between my officials and industry and consumer representatives, there is an increased awareness of nut allergy within the industry. Many manufacturers are now voluntarily labelling the presence of nuts on their labels and some have considered the reformulation of their products.

Licensed Meat Wholesalers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licensed meat wholesale premises there were in (a) Wales, (b) England and (c) Scotland at the end of 1995; and if he will make a statement. [16510]

Mrs. Browning: The tables set out the number of wholesale premises licensed at the end of 1995 under (i) the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995, (ii) the Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 and (iii) the Wild Game Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995:

Fish Discards

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met his European counterparts to discuss the discarding of fish; and if he will make a statement. [16720]

Mr. Baldry: At the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 21 to 22 December 1995, we discussed the implementation of technical conservation measures under the common fisheries policy. I led the way in pressing the case for improvements to be made to help reduce discards and conserve stocks, and it was agreed that the Commission should present new proposals by 1 June 1996. The Council undertook to reach a decision on these proposals before the end of 1996.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total expenditure of his Department on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 broken down by category. [16779]

Mr. Boswell: The information is not held centrally. Details of national expenditure broken down into 81 programmes are available from the MAFF/IB annual departmental report. The 1995 edition (CM 2803), available from the House of Commons Library, contains estimated outturn figures for 1994–95. The next edition of this report is due to be published on 25 March 1966 as part of a series, accompanied by a statistical supplement, which present the Government's expenditure plans for 1996–97 to 1998–99.

National Institute of Agricultural Botany

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for a prior options review of the National Institute of Agricultural Botany. [16973]

Mr. Boswell: None. Discussions are taking place with the National Institute of Agricultural Botany with a view to placing it unequivocally in the private sector.

Sheep Producers (Aid Packages)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to press the European Union for similar aid packages for United Kingdom sheep producers to those recently awarded to the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [17780]

Mrs. Browning: No. As yet, no aid package has been awarded to the Republic of Ireland. My right hon. and learned Friend the Minister made it clear at the Agriculture Council last December that we saw no justification for the special treatment which Ireland was seeking: responding to a weak market situation by granting special aid gives the wrong signals to producers.

The statement agreed at that meeting of the Council makes it clear that the extension of the less favoured areas supplement to the whole of Ireland—that is, including Northern Ireland—will be proposed by the Commission only if there are sufficient funds in the budget to accommodate the resultant payments.

Given the close relationship between sheepmeat production in Northern Ireland and in the Irish Republic, it is right that any special aid granted to producers in the republic should be available also to those in Northern Ireland.

Lame Sheep

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the number and percentage of lame sheep in the national flock; [16337]

(2) if he will make a statement about the results of the recent survey by his Department into lameness in sheep; and what action he intends to take to attempt to reduce the number of lame sheep in the national flock; [16338]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 February 1996]: The Government are concerned that sheep lameness is a significant problem both for welfare and economic reasons. We are currently running an advisory campaign and, following recommendations in the Farm Animal Welfare Council's report on the welfare of sheep, propose to amend the welfare code for sheep to emphasise the importance of appropriate prevention and treatment.

We have, in addition, been funding the Royal Veterinary college to carry out a study into ovine lameness. The first part of the study, a survey of a random sample of sheep holdings, found a reported incidence of lameness of about 8 per cent. in 1993–94. This is now being followed up by on-farm investigations into the different causes of lameness with a view to developing improved methods of control.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Madden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what hour and minute of what day the report of the Scott Inquiry was delivered to his office. [16540]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 22 February 1996]: My copy of the Scott report was collected from the House at 3.30 pm on Thursday 15 February and delivered promptly to my office.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members of his Department who saw the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House; and when each saw the report. [16523]

Mr. Hogg [holding answer 22 February 1996]: No member of my Department saw a copy of the report of the Scott inquiry before it was presented to the House.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he first saw the report of the Scott inquiry. [16594]

Mr. Hogg [holding answer 22 February 1996]: I first saw a copy of the report of the Scott inquiry after its publication.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16483]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 22 February 1996]: If any Ministers did so, that is a matter for them.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17304]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The Government are considering what further measures may need to be taken in the light of this and other findings of the Scott report.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Health Care)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to prevent discrimination against prisoners with specific health problems. [16695]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about steps taken to prevent discrimination against prisoners with specific health problems.

The Prison Service is conscious of the need to prevent discrimination against prisoners with specific health problems. For this reason, all notes pertaining to a prisoner's health are contained in the Inmate Medical Record (IMR). This record is kept under conditions of medical confidentiality and details of an inmate's health status are not normally made known to anyone outside the care team. (There are special exceptions such as reports to Court).

Medical officers and nurses working in the Prison Service adhere to professional codes of conduct and health care officers who are not nurses work under the supervision of the Medical Officer and are covered by that professional Code of Conduct in relation to issues of confidentiality.

Induction training for medical officers, for nurses and health care officers emphasises the need for medical confidentiality to be maintained. HIV training for prison staff, health care staff, counsellors and prison psychologists stresses the importance of medical confidentiality.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regular medical checks prisoners in prisons in England and Wales receive; and what systematic checks are carried out for transmissible diseases. [16701]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prisoners' medical checks and what systematic checks are carried out for transmissible diseases.

All persons receive a medical screening on first reception into custody. A health check is also made at each transfer between establishment, and also each time a prisoner returns from court in the case of remand prisoners.

There are no other systematic checks, but prisoners are encouraged to discuss their health care with staff. Prisoners receive advice and are counselled concerning testing for transmissible disease. At reception Hepatitis B vaccine is offered and all health screening includes questions about transmissible disease.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what specific provisions are made for those prisoners known to be terminally ill. [16694]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about provisions for terminally ill prisoners.

All prisoners receive medical treatment appropriate to their needs. Prisoners who are suffering from a terminal illness and who are expected to die before the end of their prison sentence may be released on compassionate grounds. Needs vary between individuals, and the responsible Medical Officer will make recommendations appropriate to the needs of the individual case, bearing in mind security issues and the need to protect the public.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the total annual budget for prisons in England and Wales is designated for health care. [16696]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the percentage of the total annual budget for prisons which is designated for health care.

At individual prison establishments it is for the governor to decide what proportion of his budget should be allocated to health care, having regard to the overall demands to be met. In 1994–95 spending on health care services accounted for £59 million—3.7 per cent. of the Service's total expenditure. This covered staffing costs and provision of patient care at establishments as well as the central Directorate of Health Care budget.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what policies the Prison Service has concerning the prevention of transmissible or contagious diseases (a) in general and (b) in respect of particular outbreaks. [16684]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about Prison Service policy on prevention of transmissible or contagious diseases.

The Prison Service policy on the prevention of transmissible or contagious diseases in general is to screen for transmissible diseases on reception into prison. Health checks are also provided on transfer to another establishment and in the case of remand prisoners, on return from Court.

In the case of testing for infection, testing is only carried out with the informed consent of the prisoner, which means that pre-test counselling is made available. This is the policy in the community and is reflected in Prison Service policy and practice.

In the case of Hepatitis B, immunisation is offered to inmates on reception.

The policy is to maintain medical confidentiality in respect of a prisoner's health status.

All outbreaks of notifiable transmissible diseases are reported to the Consultant in Communicable Disease Control. His/her advice in the management of outbreaks is mandatory.

Each prison is required to have contingency plans for the outbreak of food-poisoning or other communicable diseases and these contingency plans must be approved by the Consultant in Communicable Disease Control.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provision is available to prisoners for therapeutic and psychological follow-up in the case of positive results in tests for transmissible diseases. [16704]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about what provision is available to prisoners for therapeutic and psychological follow-up in the case of positive results in tests for transmissible diseases.

There is training for medical officers, prison psychologists, HIV counsellors and health care workers to enable them to provide medical, psychological and social care to people who test positive to HIV infection.

The skills and techniques of counselling for HIV infection are directly relevant to the psychological and therapeutic follow-up for other transmissible diseases such as hepatitis B, hepatitis C and tuberculosis. The multi-disciplinary HIV teams and counsellors are now receiving training which orientates them not just to HIV but for all communicable diseases.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in prisons in England and Wales are currently known to be terminally ill; and what information is available as to the nature of the terminal illness. [16693]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about terminally ill prisoners in England and Wales.

Information on the causes and total numbers of inmates who currently have terminal illnesses is not available centrally. However, health care advisors suggest that they average between 20 and 30 in the service at any one time.

Crime and Unemployment

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the research projects undertaken or commissioned by his Department in each of the past 10 years which included discussion of possible relationships between levels of crime and unemployment; and if he will make a statement. [16405]

Mr. Maclean: There have been four projects of this description.

These are:

Field, S. (1990). "Trends in Crime and their Interpretation" Home Office Research Study No. 119.

Leitner, M., Shapland, J. and Wiles, P. (1993) "Drugs Usage and Drugs Prevention; The Views and Habits of the General Public" HMSO.

Orme, J. (1994) "A Study of the Relationship between Unemployment and Recorded Crime" Home Office Statistical Findings 1/94.

Graham, J. and Bowling, B. (1995) "Young People and Crime" Home Office Research Study No. 145.

Children's Evidence

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if children can give evidence through video links to the court in all cases that involve child sex abuse in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [16324]

Mr. Maclean: All children in cases of this kind may, with the leave of the court, give evidence by means of a live television link to the court or by means of a video recording of their evidence-in-chief. If a case of this kind arises at a court which does not have the necessary facilities, it can be transferred to one which does.

Police Objectives (Drug Crime)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many representations he has received on the content of the Government's five key objectives for police forces for 1996–97; how many of those representations refer to combating drugs criminality; and if he will make a statement; [16506]

(2) how many representations he has received on his Department's designation of drugs criminality in the target and prevent crime category of the Government objectives for police forces; and if he will make a statement. [16507]

Mr. Maclean: In determining the key objectives for policing for 1996–97, my right hon. and learned Friend took account of the views of the Association of Chief Police Officers, the local authority associations, and colleagues. Three other proposals for additional key objectives were made. None of them related to drugs.

Police Station Closures

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police stations were closed, by constabulary, during (a) 1980 to 1985, (b) 1985 to 1990 and (c) 1990 to 1995. [16613]

Mr. Maclean: The information is not collected centrally.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines exist to assist officials in the immigration and nationality department in dealing with correspondence with hon. Members. [17062]

Mr. Kirkhope: Staff in the immigration and nationality department receive training and have instructions on the handling of correspondence from Members of Parliament. There are also published guidelines to assist Members of Parliament making representations in immigration cases, which were most recently updated in April 1994.

Immigration Applications

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 486, when his Department stopped obtaining the figures for refusal of extension of exceptional leave to remain as quoted in his answer of 10 May 1994, Official Report, column 74; and for what reasons. [16947]

Mr. Kirkhope: The precise information requested in the hon. Member's previous question has never been available. The answer given on 10 May 1994, Official Report, column 74, was based on the available information, which now broadly indicates that in 1994 and 1995 no more than some 30 persons in either year were refused an extension of exceptional leave to remain.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16824]

Mr. Howard: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Publication of annual reports:

Alcohol Education and Research Council (statutory)
Commission for Racial Equality (statutory)
Community Development Foundation (voluntary)
Data Protection Registrar (statutory)
Gaming Board for Great Britain (statutory)
Horserace Betting Levy Board (statutory)
Horserace Totalisator Board (statutory)
National Lottery Charities Board (statutory)
Police Complaints Authority (statutory)

(b) Publication of annual reports:

Alcohol Education and Research Council (statutory)
Commission for Racial Equality (statutory)
Community Development Foundation (voluntary)
Data Protection Registrar (statutory)
Gaming Board for Great Britain (voluntary)
Horserace Betting Levy Board (statutory)
Horserace Totalisator Board (statutory)
National Lottery Charities Board (statutory)
Police Complaints Authority (statutory)

(c) Publication of the minutes of meetings:

Community Development Foundation (voluntary)

In addition, the Commission for Racial Equality keeps copies of the Commissioners' monthly meetings, which are available to the public.

(d) Publication of the agendas of meetings:

Community Development Foundation (voluntary)

In addition, the Commission for Racial Equality keeps copies of the Commissioners' monthly meetings, which are available to the public.

(e) Publication of registers of members' interests:

The Commission for Racial Equality has a register of members interests which is available to the public. In addition, to-date, details of members' interests have sometimes been given in non-departmental public bodies' annual reports. Future arrangements for all Home Office sponsored executive NDPBs are under review, including the possibility of publishing registers of members' interests.

Kani Yilmaz

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide an answer to the question raised by the hon. Member for Woolwich in his letters of 18 December 1995 and 22 February 1996 regarding Kani Yilmaz; and if he will make a statement. [17750]

Mr. Kirkhope: I replied to the hon. Member's letter of 18 December 1995 on 21 February 1996. I shall be replying to his letter of 22 February shortly.

Commercial Gambling (Advertising)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be issuing the consultation paper on relaxation of the restrictions on casinos, bingo clubs and advertising of commercial gambling. [18215]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have published today a consultation paper which constitutes a comprehensive review of the law on casinos, licensed bingo clubs and the advertising of commercial gambling, and which restates principles for the regulation of gambling. It proposes a number of relaxations in the law.

Subject to this consultation, we propose to bring forward orders under section 1 of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to implement the changes. The paper constitutes formal consultation on some of the proposals for the purpose of section 3(1) of the 1994 Act. Other proposals will need to be the subject of further detailed consultation before implementation. Comments on the proposals are requested by the end of May 1996.

The main proposals on casinos are as follows:

Secondary legislation to allow casinos in 13 new locations. The additional areas proposed are:

Croydon
Dartford
Gloucester
Folkestone
Hastings
Ipswich
Morecambe
Oxford
Peterborough

Redbridge

Slough

Swindon

Weymouth

A reduction in the 48-hour waiting time for membership of a casino to 24 hours, together with provision for postal applications and group membership.

A new regime for gaming machines, with increased numbers and higher stakes and pay-outs.

An extension to liquor licensing hours.

Advertising of the location of casinos in directories and guides.

Payment by debit card.

The proposals on bingo are:

An end to the requirement that bingo establishments operate as members' clubs with a 24-hour waiting period for membership.

Abolition of the demand criterion for the granting of licences.

Removal of restrictions on added prize money and on frequency and prizes in multiple bingo—the national game.

Payment by debit card.

Extension of bingo licences from one year to three years.

Removal of the remaining restrictions on print advertising.

The Government are minded to allow broadcast advertising of bingo subject to the response to the consultation document.

The document also proposes the removal of the ban on the on-site print advertising of gaming machines and the print advertising, but not broadcast advertising, of betting offices.

These measures represent a balanced package of reform which aims to provide new opportunities for the industry and the consumer, while maintaining the effective regulation of gaming.

The timetable for the implementation of changes arising from this document will depend on a number of factors including the response to the consultation and the availability of additional resources for the Gaming Board of Great Britain and the courts.

Pet Animals Protection

Sir Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the policy of the United Kingdom in respect of accession to the European convention on the protection of pet animals. [18216]

Mr. Sackville: The Government remain firmly committed to adopting reasonable measures to improve the treatment of animals, but are not at present convinced that accession to the pet animals convention would add significantly to the protection which domestic animals already enjoy under existing United Kingdom law. The Government will review the position again at the end of the decade.

Prisoners (Non-English Speakers)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy regarding the conduct of social visits for persons held in Her Majesty's prisons who do not speak English; and if he will make a statement on the matters raised by the hon. Member in his letter dated 14 February. [16649]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. John Austin-Walker, dated 27 February 1996:

The Homes Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about prisoners' visits.

Generally, prisoners and their visitors may conduct their conversations in the language of their choice. The exceptions and where conversations need to be overhead for reasons of prison security or control, or because there is reason to believe that the prisoner and visitor may discuss matters relevant to national security, public safety of the commission of crime. In these situations governors may require that the conversation is monitored and interpreted.

Further details of Prison Service policy on the conduct of visits to prisoners are set out in the Security Manual, Standing Order 5, and Circular Instruction 11/1991, copies of which are in the Library.

Your letter of 14 February to the Home Secretary, was passed to the Director General because it concerned a number of operational matters and he will reply to you shortly.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Pakistan nationals who entered the United Kingdom via Malaysia have applied for asylum (a) on entry and (b) after entry in each of the last five years; how many applications have been (i) granted and (ii) refused; on how many applications a decision is pending; how many have been (1) upheld and (2) dismissed at appeal; and in respect of how many an appeal is awaited. [17334]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Information regarding the number of asylum seekers who have travelled through other countries before arriving in the United Kingdom is not held centrally. A breakdown of applications, initial decisions or appeals for such cases is, therefore, not available.

General information on asylum applications from nationals of Pakistan, including a breakdown of appeal determinations in 1994, can be found in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issue 15/95, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Prisons (Staff)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average amount spent on wages per member of staff in each prison for the first six months of the current financial year; and if he will make a statement. [16675]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 27 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to answer your recent Question about the average amount spent on wages per member of staff in each prison for the first six months of the current financial year.

The information requested is not available centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The attached table sets out the expenditure for the first six months of the year at each prison; the staff in post at the end of that six months; and expenditure per staff in post at the end of the period.

Prison Inspections

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of inspections carried out in each of her Majesty's prisons for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [16661]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Since January 1990, Her Majesty's inspectorate of prisons has carried out 245 inspections in the 131 Prison Service establishments in England and Wales, an average of nearly two inspections per establishment.

The total number of inspections undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of prisons in each year is as follows:

1990–91: 56 (from 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1991)
1991–92: 44
1992–93: 42
1993–94: 40
1994–95: 33
1995–96: 30 (from April 1995 to date)

Parental Control (Fines)

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parents of children convicted of an offence have been required to pay a fine in respect of refusal to comply with the court's decision to bind them over to take proper care of and exercise proper control over their child in the last 12 months. [16345]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Section 58(2)(b) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 gives courts the power to fine a parent or guardian in respect of a refusal to comply with the court's decision to bind them over to take proper care of and exercise proper control over their child. Information on the number of such fines is not separately identifiable centrally.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total annual budget, for each of the last 10 years, allocated for the inspection of Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement. [16662]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Information on the total annual budget allocated for the inspection of Her Majesty's prisons in England and Wales is not available before 1991–92. The total annual budget for each of the last five years was:

Year	Budget £
1991–92	568,159
1992–93	664,506
1993–94	726,344
1994–95	665,220
1995–96	737,000

Police (Bicycle Seizures)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued on the use of police powers to seize and retain bicycles used in demonstrations; and in what circumstances the police are entitled to take such action. [16792]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 February 1996]: There are no specific police powers of this kind and therefore no such guidance has been issued. The role of the police in controlling demonstrations is to preserve the peace, to uphold the law and to prevent the commission of offences. Police tactics and decisions on how to achieve these objectives are a matter for the independent operational judgment of chief officers of police.

Crime (Retail Premises)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many retail premise burglaries in Coventry in each of the last five years resulted in convictions; [17019]

(2) if he will estimate the total cost to retailers in Coventry of robberies and till snatches in each of the last five years; what are the figures in real terms; and what was the percentage change from the previous year; [17021]

(3) how many robberies and till snatches there were in retail premises in Coventry in each of the last five years; and what was the percentage change from the previous year in each case; [17020]

(4) how many retail premises were burgled in Coventry in each of the last five years; and what was the percentage change from the previous year in each case. [17018]

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 26 February 1996]: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the conviction rate for retail store robbery and till snatches in Coventry in each of the last five years. [17023]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Information which is readily available centrally is given in the table. Data for 1995 will be available in the autumn.

Prosecutions and convictions[1] in Coventry petty sessional division for theft from shops,[2] for the period 1990 to 1994

Number of defendants

	Prosecutions	Convictions[1]
1990	585	484
1991	493	408
1992	491	382
1993	468	377
1994	428	377

[1] Includes persons convicted at the Crown court, who were committed for trial/sentence by Coventry PSD.

[2] Section 1 of the Theft Act 1968.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with the President of the Board of Trade with respect to retail crime; what plans he has to combat retail crime; and if he will make a statement; [17024]

(2) what assessment he has made of the likelihood of retail premises being burgled in (a) Coventry and (b) England and Wales. [17022]

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 26 February 1996]: My right hon. and learned Friend and my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade have both contributed to the third White Paper on competitiveness, which will emphasise the importance of crime prevention.

Work to combat retail crime is being energetically pursued by the retail action group, an associate group of the Home Office Crime Prevention Agency Board. Advice booklets for retailers on preventing burglary, robber and violence to staff have already been published. Further guidance on the prevention of customer theft and external fraud and on making an arrest will be published later this year. The group is also looking at ways of identifying and promulgating best practice, including the use of technology in crime prevention.

Closed circuit television can make a significant contribution to reducing crime against retail premises, especially when it forms part of a package of crime prevention measures. The Home Office has provided advice to users in recently published guidance; and has helped promote its use through last year's CCTV challenge competition in which the majority of successful bids were from partnerships who wished to install security cameras in shopping centres and high streets in town centres around the country. My right hon. and learned Friend has announced that £15 million will be available in 1996 for a further CCTV challenge competition and it is likely that shopping areas will again be major beneficiaries.

Numerous projects are also being carried forward by police forces, local partnerships, businesses and shop watch schemes. Some have been funded under the safer cities programme. Police crime prevention officers supply regular and up to date crime prevention advice to businesses, and architectural liaison officers provide advice on the part that good building design can play in preventing crime.

The Home Office conducted a survey in 1994 to assess the risks of crime for retailers in England and Wales, including the risks of burglary. The results are reported in Home Office research study No. 146 and Home Office research and statistics directorate research findings No. 26, copies of which are in the Library. The survey does not allow any reliable results for retailers in Coventry.

Sentencing

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 February to the hon. Member for Blackburn, Official Report, column 107, if he will place in the Library a copy of the study of sentences given to those convicted of burglary and drug dealing and copies of similar studies he had commissioned or evaluated. [17009]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 February 1996]: A study of a sample of offenders convicted in 1993 is contained in chapter 9 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1994", a copy of which is in the Library. A special statistical analysis was required to provide the hon. Member with the information requested in the previous questions.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average sentence given to adults upon their (a) first, (b) second and (c) third or greater number of convictions for (i) domestic burglary and (ii) drug dealing. [17010]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The information requested is not collected routinely. The results from a sample of those convicted of indictable offences in three weeks of 1993 are given in the table.

Sentencing of domestic burglars and drug dealers[1] aged 21 or over by number of previous convictions

Offence	1st conviction		2nd conviction		3rd or greater conviction
	Percentage given immediate custody	Average custodial sentence (months)	Percentage given immediate custody	Average custodial sentence (months)	Percentage given immediate custody	Average custodial sentence (months)
Domestic burglary	39	15	51	15	57	15
Drug dealing	55	32	61	25	75	30

[1] Based on drug trafficking offences monitored and reported in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Statistics of Drugs Seizures and Offenders dealt with, United Kingdom, 1994". These are offences of unlawful production of drugs other than cannabis, unlawful supply, possession with intent to supply unlawfully and unlawful import or export.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16888]

Mr. Willetts: Staff in the Departments and agencies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible, and in other areas which fall to the Cabinet Office vote, are required to declare any business interests which might conflict with their official duties and to comply with any subsequent instructions regarding the retention, disposal and management of such interests. Records are kept at operational level. I have no plans to publish the names of those concerned or to establish a central register.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS, indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17448]

Mr. Willetts: There are none.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to increase understanding overseas of the workings of the citizens charter. [15547]

Mr. Willetts: UK success in public sector reform is recognised internationally. In particular, the citizens charter is an idea that has been adopted, and adapted, in many countries. Australia, Canada, USA, France, Belgium, Portugal, Spain, Israel, Malaysia, Hong Kong and Singapore all have programmes which resemble in substance, though not always in name, the citizens charter initiative.

Interests is still growing as more and more countries, like Argentina, Hungary, South Africa and Kuwait, seek our advice as they develop their own programmes. On current plans, over the next four months, officials will be providing briefings to representatives of 10 different countries, and will be speaking at four international conferences.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16815]

Mr. Willetts: No executive non-departmental bodies are sponsored by the Office of Public Service.

SCOTLAND

Algrade Trust

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the police investigation of property acquisitions by the Algrade Trust. [15549]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The police are inquiring into the circumstances surrounding the making of a will. The general heritable property acquisitions of the former trustees are being examined by the Scottish Charities Office in the course of its investigation into the financial affairs of the Algrade Trust.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the Scottish Charities Office to complete its investigation of the affairs of the Algrade Trust; and if he will make a statement. [15550]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The investigation is making good progress. The intervention of the Scottish Charities Office has brought about the resignations of the former trustees and their replacement by the present trustees who have backgrounds in teaching, accountancy and medicine. The new trustees are responsible for the management of the Algrade Trust. The issues giving rise to the past concerns about Algrade developed over the many years during which the former trustees had charge of the administration under the supervision and registration of the local social work department. Some new matters have emerged in the course of the investigation and further work requires to be done on points arising from the accountancy report and into aspects of the property transactions. The investigation is not likely to be concluded before the end of June of this year.

Court Service

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many summary trials there were in the sheriff court during 1995; and if he will indicate the total number of adjournments of summary trials in the sheriff court, the reason for these adjournments and if they were at the instance of the prosecution or the defence. [15861]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is held by the Scottish Court Service and I have asked the chief executive to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Michael Ewart to Mr. John McFall, dated 27 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about Sheriff Court trials and adjournments during 1995.

The figures you seek are as follows:

1. During the period 1 January 1995 to 31 December 1995 there were 59,299 diets of trial called which involved 43,552 summary cases.

2. Of the 59,299 diets, 15,747 were adjourned trial diets. The reasons recorded for these adjournments were:

Reason	Number of adjournments
(a) Availability/absence of Crown witness	3,207
(b) Lack of Court time	2,835
(c) Lateness of the hour/completion of evidence	1,158
(d) Availability/absence of Defence witness	1,155
(e) Inadequate time to prepare for trial	1,016
(f) Adjourned to notional trail diet	945
(g) Miscellaneous[1]	5,431
	15,745

[1] Miscellaneous includes a variety of causes each of which occurs relatively infrequently, including the absence of a defence agent, Procurator Fiscal or Sheriff due to ill health, change of defence agent, difficulties with productions, adverse weather conditions and for further investigation.

These figures do not include adjournments for reasons stated after the conclusion of a trail, for example, in those cases where the Sheriff defers sentence for the accused to demonstrate good behaviour.

I am sorry that we do not hold centrally figures which show whether adjournments were at the instance of defence or prosecution.

I hope this information is helpful.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total number of summary trials in the sheriff courts during 1995; [16732]

(2) what was the total number of adjournments of summary trials in the sheriff courts and the reason for these adjournments during 1995; and whether they were at the instance of the prosecution or the defence. [16733]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by the chief executive of the Scottish Court Service.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many independent sector schools have (a) more than 25 per cent.; (b) more than 50 per cent.; and (c) less than 5 per cent. of their school rolls made up of pupils covered by the assisted places scheme in the academic year 1995–96. [16328]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is set out in the table.

School session	1995–96
Assisted pupils over 25 per cent. but not more than 50 per cent. of school roll	4
Assisted pupils more than 50 per cent. of school roll	Nil
Assisted pupils less than 5 per cent. of school roll	9

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for the financial year 1995–96 in descending order the proportions of the school rolls at independent schools made up of pupils covered by the assisted places scheme; what is the total number of pupils covered by the assisted places scheme at each school; what is the total number of pupils on the roll of each school; what proportion of the school roll at each school is covered by the assisted places scheme; what is the level of fees charged for pupils under the assisted place scheme at each school; and what are the amounts received by each school under the assisted places scheme. [16332]

Mr. Robertson: The information requested is detailed in the table. The assisted places scheme is administered, and statistical information collected, in respect of each school session and not by reference to financial years. The information provided relates to fee remission grant allocations for the 1995–96 school session and to pupil numbers in the schools at the spring term of that school session.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which independent sector schools charged (a) the highest and (b) the lowest level of fees to pupils covered by the assisted places scheme in the academic year 1995–96; and what charges were levied. [16330]

Mr. Robertson: The highest tuition fee charged to pupils covered by the assisted places scheme in academic year 1995–96 was at Glenalmond college at £7,802 per annum. The lowest fees were charged at Hamilton college—£2,341 per annum for pupils aged 12 to 18 years.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much his Department has spent on the operation of the assisted places scheme in the academic year 1995–96; how many pupils are covered by the scheme in this period; what is the number of institutions covered by the scheme in this period; and what was the overspend on the budget allocated to the scheme in this period. [16329]

Mr. Robertson: The information requested is set out in the table. Expenditure on the assisted places scheme is cash limited each year and there have been no overspends on the budget allocated in any year since the scheme commenced.

Clinical Outcome Indicators

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of (a) collecting the data for and (b) publishing the clinical outcome indicators for the national health service in Scotland released in February 1996. [16710]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no specific data collection costs attributable to the outcome indicators work. Routine returns are simply being examined in new ways. The cost of printing the report which is distributed free was approximately £3,000.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor wheelchair. [17189]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The average cost of providing an electrically powered indoor wheelchair is £1,000.

The actual cost of supplying a wheelchair to an individual patient will vary according to the model provided and any modification necessary to meet a patient's needs.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor wheelchairs by health boards in each of the last three years. [17197]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Information on the number of indoor powered chairs issued in the last three years is not held centrally. Details of the overall number purchased since 1992 are set out in the table.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been provided with electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs by health boards in each of the last three years. [17195]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Information on the number of indoor/outdoor powered chairs issued in the last three years is not held centrally. Details of the overall number purchased since the provision of special funding in 1992 are set out in the table.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure has been incurred by health boards for the purchase of electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years. [171892]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 February 1996]: In February 1992, special funding was made available in Scotland for the provision of patient-controlled electric powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs. The allocation available to artificial limb and appliance centres for the provision of these chairs over the last three years is as detailed:

1993–94: £900,000
1994–95: £929,000
1995–96: £946,000

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent figure available for the cost of providing an individual with an electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair. [17015]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The average cost of providing an electrically powered indoor/outdoor wheelchair is £1,750.

The actual cost of supplying a wheelchair to an individual patient will vary according to the model provided and any modification necessary to meet a patient's needs.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure has been incurred by health boards in Scotland for the purchase of electrically powered indoor wheelchairs in each of the last three years. [17073]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The services provided by the artificial limb and appliance centres—ALACs—which includes the wheelchair service, are at present funded centrally by the national services division, NSD, of the common services agency. A review of the service currently under way recommended that funding of this service should be devolved to health boards from 1 April 1996. This recommendation was accepted and notification of the notional allocation for each board was included in the financial allocations for 1996–97.

Restraint and Confiscation Orders

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many restraint and confiscation orders have been obtained in each of the last three years; and for what amounts. [17145]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of restraint and confiscation orders obtained in the past three years are as undernoted at[1].

Restraint orders, by their nature, cover all the realisable property of an accused person whether specifically detailed in the restraint order or not and therefore it follows that individual amounts cannot be determined. The amounts fixed by the court in individual confiscation orders and totals for each year are undernoted at[2].

Breast Screening

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what forecasts he has made of the number of women who will present themselves annually at the national health service breast screening programmes; and if they have been adjusted to take into account the effects of private sector advertising; [17824]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of private sector advertising on the number of women presenting themselves at NHS mass screening programmes; and if he will make a statement; [17825]

(3) what discussions have taken place between his Department and Health Care International regarding the recent advertisements of breast screening; [17826]

4) what comparative assessment he has made of the service offered by the NHS breast screening programme and the service being offered by Health Care International; [17827]

(5) what steps he has taken to assess whether the breast screening service provided by Health Care International will follow agreed NHS standards of practice for breast screening. [17828]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has been no adjustment to the target set for attendance for screening in the Scottish breast screening programme as a result of private sector advertising. The current target for attendance in the UK NHS breast screening programme is 70 per cent. In Scotland, this means that about 130,000 women are invited for screening each year and more than 91,000 are screened. No discussions have taken place between the Scottish Office and Health Care International regarding the recent advertisements for breast screening and no assessment has been made of the service being offered by it.

The Scottish breast screening programme offers free screening every three years to all eligible women aged 50 to 64. Women aged over 64 can attend on request at the same frequency. Every effort is made to ensure that women and their general practitioners are aware of this high-quality free service.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the implementation of EC directive 95/29 on the transport of live animals does not exclude producers in the highlands and islands from markets; and if he will make a statement. [17531]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: EC directive 95/29 sets out a range of requirements for ensuring the welfare of animals being transported throughout the single market. Implementation in Great Britain will have to be sufficiently flexible to allow the traditional pattern of livestock and marketing to continue from all parts of the country, including the highlands and islands. We shall consult further on our legislative proposals.

General Practitioner Fundholding

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the study of general practitioner fundholding commissioned by his Department and carried out by John Howie of the department of general practice at Edinburgh university during 1995. [17669]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Arrangements are being made for the report of the study to be placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Statistics

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals are currently in receipt of payments from the Benefits Agency. [15432]

Mr. Roger Evans: This administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Chris Davies, dated 26 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many individuals are currently in receipt of payments from the Benefits Agency.

The information is not available in the form requested as a customer may be in receipt of more than one benefit at any time.

Annex A gives details of the number of recipients of the different benefits, administered by the BA. This information which is updated annually is available in the Library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Annex A: Benefits Agency benefit recipients

Benefit	Number of recipients (thousands)
Attendance Allowance	1,050
Child Benefit	7,000
Disability Living Allowance	1,512
Disability Working Allowance	5
Family Credit	602
Income Support	5,751
Invalidity Benefit	1,857
Invalid Care Allowance	285
Industrial Death Benefit	21
Industrial Disablement Benefit	223
Maternity Allowance	15
Non-Contributory Retirement Pension	27
One Parent Benefit	949
Reduced Earnings Allowance/RA	151
Retirement Pension	10,149
Severe Disability Allowance	342
Sickness Benefit	141
Widows Benefit	290

Notes:
1. Figures are provisional and subject to change.
2. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
3. Some people receive more than one benefit and the extent of the overlap cannot easily be quantified.
4. The information has been provided for the year 1994–95, with the exception of Industrial Disablement Benefit, Reduced Earnings Allowance/RA which is 1993–94.
5. Information in this table has been collected in March each year, with the following exceptions: Income Support in February; Sickness Benefit, Invalidity Benefit, Severe Disability Allowance, Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit and Reduced Earnings Allowance/RA in March/April and Industrial Death Benefit in December.
6. Invalidity Benefit and Sickness Benefit were replaced by Incapacity Benefit from 13 April 1995.

Benefits Agency (Costs)

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount is spent annually by the Benefits Agency on (a) postage, (b) stationery and (c) printing. [15433]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Chris Davies, dated 26 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what amount is spent annually by the Benefits Agency on (a) postage, (b) stationery and (c) printing.

The information requested is not available in the form requested. The Agency accounting systems do not separate the individual costs of stationery from printing. The figure for stationery and printing also includes the cost of the small local office requisites.

The Figures below are for the financial year 1994/95, the last full year for which figures are available:-

Postage:

For despatch of payments: £43.019 million

Other postage costs: £20.230 million

Stationery and Printing £51.034 million

These figures are provisional and subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16022]

Mr. Heald: The Occupational Pensions Board is the only executive non-departmental public body sponsored by this Department. It is:

(a) subject to the investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration (PCA);

(b) not subject to scrutiny by the Audit Commission;

(c) subject to scrutiny by the National Audit Office, under the National Audit Act 1983;

(d) subject to the statutory provisions for open government;

(e) not subject to published performance indicators;

(f) committed to the principles of the citizens charter.

The board and its staff were brought within the jurisdiction of the PCA on 31 July 1995. From the same date, the board has been subject to the open government provisions which apply only to bodies within the ambit of the Parliamentary Commissioner. In line with the principles of the citizens charter, the OPB published its charter standard statement and code of practice in July 1994.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16818]

Mr. Heald: The Occupational Pensions Board is the only executive non-departmental public body sponsored by this Department. It does not publish: annual reports; annual accounts; minutes, or agendas, of meetings. It has voluntarily compiled a register of members' interests which is available for public inspection.

Earnings

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he has taken legal advice as to whether the different benefits available to those earning above or below the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions contravene European law on sex discrimination; and if he will make a statement; [16621]

(2) if he will list the benefits available only to those earning above the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions. [16620]

Mr. Heald: The benefits available to people who have paid sufficient class 1 national insurance contributions are set out in section 21(2) of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992. Statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay are also available to employees who have earnings at or above the lower earnings limit and meet the other qualifying conditions. Employees with earnings below that limit are not liable to pay class 1 contributions, but they can pay voluntary class 3 contributions which count towards retirement pension and widow's benefits. In the light of the recent judgment by the European Court of Justice in the case of Inge Nolte v. Landesversicherungsansstalt Hannover (C317/93)), we consider that a lower earnings limit for payment of class 1 contributions is not incompatible with the principle of equal treatment between men and women in matters of social security.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what circumstances a deduction from earnings order is imposed by the Child Support Agency. [16388]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Deductions from earnings orders are used only as a last resort. They are an important method for securing compliance where it has not proved possible to get absent parents to pay maintenance fully and regularly. Nearly 38,000 deductions from earnings orders have been issued since April 1995. This is a significant increase on the 1994–95 total of 32,027.

Cold Weather Payments, Wales

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the total amount paid in each year since 1991 in respect of cold weather payments in each Welsh county; [17047]

(2) what was the total amount paid in each parliamentary constituency in Clwyd in respect of cold weather payments in each year since 1991. [17045]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is contained in the social fund statistical series—cold weather payments by district offices—held in the statistical section of the Library.

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will undertake a review of weather stations used to monitor payments for cold weather payments for Wales. [17060]

Mr. Evans: The operation of the cold weather payments scheme is reviewed with the Meteorological Office after the end of March each year. In particular, links between weather stations and postcode areas are reviewed and where appropriate, changes are made.

Benefit Entitlement (Water Costs)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the advantages and disadvantages of revising the figure included for water costs in the calculations of benefit entitlement to reflect (a) variations of regional costs, (b) the rateable value of the property concerned and (c) the fact of a property being on a metered charge; [16805]

(2) what figure for water costs is included in the calculations of benefit entitlement (a) in 1995 and (b) in each of the preceding five years. [16804]

Mr. Roger Evans: Income support is a national benefit which provides a level of income for normal daily expenditure. It does not specify particular amounts for particular items of household expenditure many of which, like water, vary regionally and over time. The cost of restructuring the benefit in the way envisaged would be considerable.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average deduction from income support, (a) with and (b) without an element for arrears, paid to water companies where people have opted to have their water costs deducted at source. [16803]

Mr. Evans: The information available is set out in the table.

Direct payment deductions from income support for water/sewerage charges

Average weekly deduction excluding arrears	3.34
Average weekly deduction including arrears	5.86

Source:
Income Support Statistics Quarterly Enquiry February 1995.
Note:
1. In certain circumstances, direct payment deductions for water/sewerage charges may be made without the consent of the Income Support recipient. Figures for people who have specifically opted tor direct payments are not available.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to ensure that the interests of pensioner members of pension schemes are fully represented through the trustees in drawing up the Occupational Pension Schemes. (Member-nominated Trustees and Directors) Regulations 1996. [17380]

Mr. Heald: Trustees of a trust scheme are not representative of a particular group or category of member. The interests of pensioner members will be fully considered because all trustees have a duty to consider the interests of all the beneficiaries of the pension fund. This aspect of trustees' conduct is a provision of trust law and is unaffected by the proposed Occupational Pension Schemes (Members-nominated Trustees and Directors) Regulations 1996.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Kenya

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent report he has received on the current human rights situation; what assessment he has made of the electoral process; and if he will make a statement about the current political situation in Kenya. [17830]

Mr. Hanley: We receive reports from a variety of sources about human rights in Kenya. We have some concerns about the political situation and certain aspects of the electoral process. We draw these to the attention of the Kenyan authorities during our regular contacts. The UK is making a positive contribution to Kenya's development as an emerging democracy.

Uganda

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Ugandan Government about the necessity of free and fair elections, with particular reference to the need to allow political parties to conduct electoral campaigns. [17602]

Mr. Hanley: We have made it clear to President Museveni and his Government, to representatives of Ugandan political parties and to the Ugandan public through the local media the importance that we attach to the holding of free and fair elections, consistent with Uganda's new constitution.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will itemise the United Kingdom bilateral aid to Uganda in the last year for which figures are available. [17600]

Mr. Hanley: Total UK bilateral aid to Uganda in 1994–95 was £36.2 million, of which programme aid accounted for £20 million. The main sectors of support from our project aid were good government, over £4 million, power, over £3 million, and, health and population, over £2 million.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will itemise European Union aid to Uganda in the last year for which figures are available. [17601]

Mr. Hanley: The European Union disbursed over 55 million ecu in 1994, the last year for which figures are available. Over 44 million ecu was disbursed under the European development fund—EDF VI and EDF VII—and focused on infrastructure, health, income generation and small enterprises. Nearly 11 million ecu was made available from Stabex funds.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the funding of the Ugandan elections. [17599]

Mr. Hanley: Donors have been asked by the Government of Uganda to support the forthcoming presidential and parliamentary elections. We and other donors are considering this request in the light of progress in putting into place arrangements which will ensure that the elections are conducted freely and fairly.

Police Training

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have received Overseas Development Administration funding to finance police training in the United Kingdom since 1990. [16943]

Mr. Hanley: The countries that received ODA financing of police training in the UK in 1994 and 1995 or who were expected to receive such support in 1995 are as follows;

1994

Anguilla
Bangladesh
Botswana
British Virgin Islands
Cayman Islands
Czech Republic
Grenada
Guyana
India
Indonesia
Lesotho
Mauritius
Namibia
Nigeria
Oman
Papua New Guinea
Poland
St. Lucia
St. Helena
St. Kitts
Sierra Leone
Sri Lanka
Surinam
Tonga
Uganda
Vanuatu

1995

Bangladesh
Barbados
Bosnia
Botswana
Brazil
BVI
Cayman Islands
Czech Republic
Ethiopia
Fiji
Hungary

India
Indonesia
Jordan
Kenya
Lebanon
Lesotho
Madagascar
Mauritius
Montserrat
Nepal
Nigeria
Papua New Guinea
Philippines
Poland
Romania
Russia
Sierra Leone
South Africa
Sri Lanka
St. Vincent
Swaziland
Thailand
Uganda
Ukraine

We have not collated this information for earlier years and it would involve a disproportionate expense to collect it now.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many United Kingdom police (a) training consultants and (b) technical co-operation officers have been sent to Indonesia since 1990; and what was the cost of their visits. [16942]

Mr. Hanley: Under the police management training project, five police training consultants have visited Indonesia. The cost between 1990–91 and 1994–95 was £584,000. No technical co-operation officers were sent.

Multilateral Aid

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the multilateral overseas development budget has been directed through (a) the European Union and (b) each of the UN multilateral agencies in each year between 1992 and 1995. [16396]

Mr. Hanley: In 1994–95 54 per cent. of ODA's multilateral contributions were directed through the European Community programme, and 9 per cent. through UN agencies. More detailed information is set out in table 8 of "British Aid Statistics", 1990–91 to 1994–95, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Country Strategy Papers

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what provision he plans to make for input by UN agencies to the Overseas Development Administration's country strategy papers. [16404]

Mr. Hanley: In drawing up country strategy papers, ODA consults outside bodies including UN agencies where appropriate. The nature and level of this consultation will depend upon the context in which the aid programme is operating in a particular country and the overall strategy being considered.

In turn, we also encourage UN agencies to consult us and other donors on their country strategies.

Pakistan (Afghan Refugees)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what food aid has been given by the United Kingdom Government from the European Union food surplus to help the Government of Pakistan feed Afghan refugees now living in Pakistan; and if he will make a statement. [17159]

Mr. Hanley: No food aid is being provided for Afghans who have settled in Pakistan, but 5,000 tonnes of wheat have been given to Afghanistan this financial year and a further 5,000 tonnes are expected next year.

UK food aid is not provided as a means of disposing of EU food surpluses, which in any case scarcely exists any longer.

Mr. Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effects of the European Community—technical aid to the commonwealth of independent states project in 1996 on retraining activiites in the Russian Federation. [16909]

Mr. Hanley: The European Commission, which manages TACIS, undertook in 1995 a mid-term assessment of its project for retraining discharged military officers in the Russian Federation. The current project is expected to end in December 1996, when a full independent evaluation of its achievements is planned, before proposals are put forward on any further EC support for retraining.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Refugees (Yugoslavia)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received concerning the safety of refugees in the United Kingdom returning to the states of the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement; [17386]

(2) if he will make a statement concerning the future status of refugees from the former Yugoslavia. [17385]

Mr. Kirkhope: Applications for refugee status in the United Kingdom will continue to be carefully considered on their individual merits and in the light of the circumstances of the case and conditions in the country of origin. We have received no recent representations specifically on the safety of returns to the former Yugoslavia, but we and other Governments are in close touch with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on this subject.

Death Certificates

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been given to coroners as to the recording of employment status on death certificates. [17251]

Mr. Sackville: Death certification is a matter for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. I understand that guidance on how to record the occupation of the deceased person is contained in notes supplied by the OPCS to coroners to assist them in providing registrars of death with the registration particulars required.

Rape Offences

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, column 112 (1) what is the definition of the term substantive as used in his answer in respect of the rape offences; [17111]

(2) which constabularies and on how many occasions issued cautions in respect of the offence of substantive rape and attempted rape in the periods January to March 1994 and from April to December 1994; [17112]

(3) when he will be able to give the comparable figures for the cautions issued in 1995. [17110]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Offences of "substantive" rape as quoted in the answer of 6 February refer to all offences of rape under section 1 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 other than attempted rape, where rape is as defined in section 142(2) of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 and an attempt in any act that is more than merely preparatory to the intended commission of the crime but not the crime itself.

Provisional summary information on cautioning in England and Wales in 1995 will be available in the summer of 1996. Final data, including detailed information by offence and police force area, will be available in late autumn 1996.

Information on which police forces issued cautions for offences of substantive rape and attempted rape in 1994 is shown in the following table.

Number of persons cautioned for substantive rape and attempted rape in (a) January to March 1994 and (b) April to December 1994 by police force area.

Police force area	Number cautioned
January to March 1994
Substantive rape
Bedfordshire	1
Cambridgeshire	1
Hertfordshire	1
Gloucestershire	2
Metropolitan Police	1
Wiltshire	1
April to December 1994
Substantive rape
Cambridgeshire	1
Devon and Cornwall	1
Staffordshire	2

Docklands Bombing (Fire Appliances)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many appliances attended the site of the docklands bombing on 10 February; what time the first appliance arrived and what time the last appliance left; and from which stations the appliances were drawn; [17028]

(2) how many appliances attended the scene of the docklands bombing on 12 February; what time the first appliance arrived; and from which stations the appliances were drawn; [17030]

(3) how many appliances attended the site of the docklands bombing on 11 February; what time the first appliance arrived and what time the last appliance left; and from which stations the appliances were drawn. [17029]

Mr. Sackville [holding answers 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her on 26 February, Official Report, column 412.

Fire Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents the fire brigades of (a) Clwyd and (b) Gwynedd attended in (i) 1980, (ii) 1994 and (iii) 1995. [17329]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is given in the following table. Data for 1994 are provisional and are not available for 1995.

Incidents attended by local authority fire brigades in (a) Clwyd and (b) Gwynedd in (i) 1980 and (ii) 1994

Year	(a) Clwyd	(b) Gwynedd
1980[1]	4,087	2,382
1994[2]	7,102	3,887

[1] Includes estimates for periods of industrial action when data were not recorded.

[2] Provisional data which include special services attended between April 1994 and March 1995.

Police Forces (Capital Assets)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will lift the restrictions currently placed on (a) United Kingdom police forces and (b) the North Wales police preventing them from utilising as they deem fit the 75 per cent. of reserved receipts arising from the sale of capital assets; and if he will make a statement. [17325]

Mr. Maclean: The legislation and regulations governing the use of capital receipts by local and police authorities in England and Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales.

The proportion of capital receipts required to be set aside for debt redemption by police authorities is contained within the Local Authorities (Capital Finance) Regulations 1990, as amended. The Government keep these regulations under review.

Body Belts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of the Metropolitan police towards the body belt of the type involved in the death of Joy Gardner; how that policy has changed since this incident; and if he will make a statement. [17340]

Mr. Maclean: I understand that, following the recommendations of the joint Home Office-police review of removal procedures in immigration cases involving the police, the Metropolitan police intend that a belt with handcuffs should be used only exceptionally and in strictly controlled conditions, taking into account the advice of a qualified medical practitioner in each case.

Police Escorts (Abnormal Loads)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many abnormal loads were notified to police authorities for escorted access in the United Kingdom since 1 January 1994. [17152]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Programme Development Unit

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what date he expects to announce his decision on the outcome of the second round of funding for local projects considered by the programme development unit of his Department. [16718]

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to her on 15 February, Official Report, column 706.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interest. [16882]

Mr. Howard: Standing guidance to staff requires that anyone who is faced with a conflict of interest must declare that interest to senior management so that the latter can determine how best to proceed. Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer. No comprehensive central record of declarations of interests or holdings is kept in my Department and I have no plans to establish such a register.

International Terrorists

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) incidents and (b) potential incidents involving international terrorists in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [16037]

Mr. Howard: The list covers known terrorism believed to have international links, occurring in England and Scotland in the last 10 years. There have also been 22 terrorist-type incidents associated with opposition to Salman Rushdie, not necessarily of foreign origin. There have been no international terrorist incidents in Wales and Northern Ireland during this period. Information on those involved in international terrorist incidents and potential incidents could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

Marine Services Organisation

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the market testing of the Marine Services Organisation has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [18425]

Mr. Soames: Final proposals for the management of marine services support to the Department were received on 18 December 1995 from an in-house bid team drawn from the Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service and from two private sector interests; a Denholm-SERCO consortium and the Ocean Group. These bids were evaluated accordingly to a pre-defined and publicised methodology.

Based on the results of this evaluation, it is intended to award the management of the moorings and buoys task and the naval armaments freighting task to the in-house bid team, the RMAS. The operation of the ports task—under which services are provided to the three main naval bases—will be awarded under a five-year contract to Denholm-SERCO. This latter award followed the elimination of the in-house team for reasons of non-compliance with the management requirements of the task. RMAS personnel currently employed on ports activities will have the option of transferring to Denholm-SERCO under the terms of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981. Existing RMAS vessels required by Denholm-SERCO will be leased to the company under commercial charter terms. The vesting date for the new management arrangements is currently scheduled for 8 July 1996.

All the proposals received envisaged a significant reduction in the number of vessels and posts required to undertake the tasks. The selected bids will entail a total reduction of some 500 posts—approximately 45 per cent. of the current work force—as well as some 35 per cent. fewer vessels. Consultation with the TU side on the TUPE implications of this decision and on any redundancy arrangements necessary will take place in the normal way.

The MOD will benefit from the efficiencies which the market test will introduce into all the current marine service activities. It is envisaged that the Department will save some £105 million over 10 years as a result of the measures announced today.

Elizabeth Barracks, Pirbright

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decision he has made about the future occupancy of Elizabeth barracks, Pirbright. [18426]

Mr. Soames: As announced by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces on 5 July 1994, Official Report, column 173, it had been intended to move the Gurkha battalion based at Church Crookham to Elizabeth barracks, Pirbright at the end of 1996. We have revised this plan in the light of the decision to replace one of the three Foot Guard battalions currently engaged on public duties by a line infantry battalion, so as to enable the Foot Guards battalion to increase the proportion of its effort employed on training for its operational roles.

The Foot Guards battalion concerned will continue to provide reinforcements for public duties on a surge basis, and it is therefore our intention that it should be based at Elizabeth barracks, Pirbright where it can fulfil this role and undertake effective operational training. The Gurkhas will move instead to Sir John Moore barracks at Shorncliffe in early 1999. Sir John Moore barracks will be modernised during the intervening period. We are confident that these moves make the most efficient use of the Army's resources, including the defence estate, and meet its operational priorities in the most effective way.

Type 23 Frigates

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for defence if he will make a statement about the type 23 frigate order. [18427]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am pleased to announce that an order will be placed shortly with Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd. for a further batch of three type 23 frigates to enter service with the Royal Navy around the turn of the century.

We received bids from two shipyards: Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd. and Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. Both companies submitted high-quality tenders, reflecting their longstanding and world-renowned expertise in the construction of modern warships. The prices offered by Yarrow Shipbuilders, however, were significantly lower.

Our decision has been reached on the basis of best value for money for the taxpayer. It does not in any way reflect adversely on the capabilities of Vosper Thornycroft as a builder of warships; indeed, it remains one of the foremost warshipbuilders in the world.

At the same time, however, the order reflects great credit on Yarrows, and will be good news for jobs not only in the Clyde area but for other communities throughout the UK who will benefit from subcontracts for weapons and other systems for the ships. The total value of this work will approach £400 million.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure by his Department on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 broken down by category. [16775]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is not available in the form requested. However, there are no MOD establishments or employees, service or civilian, on the Isle of Wight. Sixteen defence contractors on the island received payments direct from MOD, totalling some £32 million in 1994–95; details of payments to individual firms are commercially confidential. Payments by defence prime contractors to their subcontractors are not included in the figure.

Mr. Ian McDonald

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the present duties of Mr. Ian McDonald, former head of the defence export sales section. [17799]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Mr. McDonald remains the head of the defence export services secretariat. The division provides the secretariat function for the Defence export services Organisation and is the focus for export licensing within my Department.

Defence Establishments (Security)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department takes to ensure that the security of Army camps and other MoD establishments against terrorist attack is fully taken into account when local authorities consider planning proposals in the near vicinity to such establishments. [17509]

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to discuss security measures. However, all measures deemed necessary take into account the local threat and are kept under constant review by establishments.

Where proposed developments require planning permission, local authorities are obliged by planning guidance to consult all adjoining landowners in both the private and public sector. Local authorities are also required to consult my Department about proposed developments near certain essential defence establishments and installations—that is, airfields, explosive establishments and technical (radar/radio) sites.

Business Appointment Rules

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of state for Defence what procedures his Department follows to ensure that an individual applicant does not take up the appointment stated in a failed application made under the business appointment rules. [17668]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Where a condition is imposed on a business appointment application, both the applicant and the prospective employer are informed in writing and it is made clear that the employment should not be taken up before the duration of the condition has lapsed.

Sri Lanka (Arms Sales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of state for Defence what is his current policy on the sale of (a) aircraft and (b) other armaments to Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [17558]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is the Government's policy to support the sale of British defence equipment overseas where this is compatible with our political, strategic and security interests. All licence applications for the export of defence equipment are considered on a case-by-case basis in the light of established criteria, including the international guidelines to which we are committed.

Central Ammunition Depot, Longtown

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what payments were made to which companies for the storage of ammunition at the central ammunition depot at Longtown from 7 to 16 June 1988. [17700]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Army stores its own ammunition and does not pay contractors; therefore, no payments were made to companies for the storage of ammunition at the central ammunition depot, Longtown between 7 and 16 June 1988.

Seconded Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in how many cases since 13 May 1985 company staff seconded to the Defence Export Services Organisation continued to have their salary and allowances paid by the original company; and what written guidelines to cover this situation have been issued. [17798]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Nine staff have been seconded to DESO under MOD's interchange programme since May 1985.

Inward secondees remain the employees of their parent company. As such, the company continues to be responsible for payment of salary, pension contributions, company medical plan payments, earnings-related national insurance contribution, etcetera, in accordance with company rules. As part of the formal agreement between MOD and the company, the Department reimburses salary and other costs at the rate equivalent to the civil service grade held by the secondee.

Guidance on the payment of secondees into the civil service has been issued in the civil service management code. This states that, subject to general rules on pay—pay levels, etcetera, and the appointment of secondees, the actual secondment terms are a matter for negotiation between the receiving organisation, the sending employer and the secondee.

Land Mines (Bosnia)

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the country of origin of the land mines which have been responsible for the death or injury of British soldiers in Bosnia. [17667]

Mr. Soames: Complete information is not available. Where it has been possible to recover and examine fragments, however, the mines concerned were identified as having been manufactured in the former Yugoslavia.

Army Tanks

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tanks the Army possessed in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996. [17758]

Mr. Arbuthnot: At 1 January 1979, the Army possessed 870 main battle tanks, of which 620 were deployed in operational units, and at 1 January 1996, 470 main battle tanks, of which 350 were deployed in operational units.

Medical Services Review

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library the submissions received from the Department of Health, the NHS executive, NHS trusts and health authorities in relation to (a) the defence medical services review in "Options for Change" and (b) the "Front Line First" review in the period 1 January 1994 until 17 October 1994. [17762]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member.

RAF Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many front-line aircraft the RAF possessed in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996. [17757]

Mr. Soames: The number of operational, excluding training and communications, RAF aircraft at 31 March 1979 was 628. The corresponding figure for 31 March 1996 is planned to be 512.

Railhead Transfer Equipment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if railhead transfer equipment was deployed in the gulf war with the DROPS—demountable rack offloading and pick-up system—logistic supply chain; and if he will make a statement. [17761]

Mr. Soames: Railhead transfer equipment was not deployed in the Gulf because the tractor units on which it was mounted were not designed to operate in the desert conditions of the Gulf.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the deployment of the Arbau-Klaus railhead transfer equipment to Bosnia; and how trains transporting British equipment unload their cargo before that deployment. [17759]

Mr. Soames: There is no requirement for the Arbau-Klaus railhead transfer equipment to be deployed to Bosnia. The unloading of cargo is currently undertaken by whichever mechanical handling system is available at each station or siding.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Arbau-Klaus railhead transfer equipment is capable of unloading DROPS flatracks. [17760]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Yes. The Arbau-Klaus railhead transfer equipment fully meets the specification to handle the DROPS flatracks.

Destroyers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many destroyers the Royal Navy possessed in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996. [17755]

Mr. Soames: On 1 April 1979 12 destroyers were in service with the Royal Navy, the same number as today.

Exercise Purple Star

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list his Department's vessels which will take part in the sea exercise Purple Star with the American navy, when the exercise will take place, and if he will make a statement. [17763]

Mr. Soames: Exercise Purple Star will take place, with the United States Navy, off the eastern seaboard of the United States from late April to mid-May. It is not our normal practice to give details in advance of the composition of groups of ships taking part in exercises. The UK will, however, be making a sizeable contribution in terms of ships, aircraft and personnel.

Personnel Statistics

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the strength of the (a) Army manpower, (b) RAF manpower and (c) Royal Navy manpower in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1996. [17756]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is contained in "TSP1—Tri-Service Personnel Statistics—Strengths, Intake and Outflow of UK Regular Forces", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Radar

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the choice of a radar system for his Department's replacement maritime patrol aircraft. [17671]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The responses to the invitation to tender for a replacement maritime patrol aircraft are currently being assessed by my Department. The selection of particular subcontractors for subsystems is a matter for the bidders themselves.

Spartan Vehicles

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Spartan vehicles will be converted from petrol to diesel engines; and if he will make a statement. [17672]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As part of the enhancement programme for the combat vehicle reconnaissance (tracked)—CVR(T)—family of vehicles, which includes Spartan, studies have been undertaken into the feasibility of replacing existing petrol engines with diesel. Further work is currently in progress, which should allow a decision on whether to proceed to be made this summer. If it is decided to proceed, the first diesel engines are expected to enter service in 1998, with production complete by 2000–01.

Advanced Rifle Grenades

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent contracts he has signed for the purchase of advanced rifle grenades. [17663]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A contract was signed on 22 December 1995 to purchase rifle grenades from TAAS Israel Industries.

Maritime Patrol Aircraft

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many replacement maritime patrol aircraft his Department plans to purchase. [17674]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The number of replacement maritime patrol aircraft to be purchased is currently under examination in the context of our assessment of responses to the invitation to tender. At present, no decision has been taken.

American Contracts

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of the contracts placed with American companies in the last two years. [17675]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The total value and number of contracts placed with American companies over the last two years are as follows:

	Number	Value (£)
1994	270	153,965,050
1995	296	1,602,086,486
Totals	566	1,756,051,536

Royal Marines Reserve

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will update his answer of 15 March 1995, Official Report, column 638, in respect of the roles and future strength of Royal Marines Reserve. [17831]

Mr. Soames: The role and tasking, and therefore the strength, of the Royal Marines Reserve are kept under review so as to ensure that they reflect our operational requirements. Any future changes would of course be subject to consultation in the usual way.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Passes

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what procedures exist governing the issue of House of Commons passes to foreign nationals; and if he will make a statement. [17856]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: A House of Commons photographic pass may be issued to a foreign national provided the appropriate application is signed by the sponsoring Member and security clearance has been obtained.

Members' Interests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chairman of the Committee on Standards and Privileges when he expects the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards to provide guidelines to hon. Members in respect of the declaration of interest on parliamentary questions and motions. [17231]

Mr. Newton: Following recommendations to the House contained in paragraphs 55 to 60 of the first report of the Select Committee on Standards in Public Life of Session 1994–95, HC 637, the House agreed, with effect from the beginning of Session 1995–96, to extend the rules about declaring interests to cover the giving of written notices. Accordingly, on 23 October last, the Table Office issued a guidance note to Members on the application of the amended rules. Members were advised that if they had doubts about whether a declaration of interest was appropriate they should consult the Parliamentary Commissioner for Standards.

Walter Somers (Trade and Industry Committee)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has anything to add to his oral answer to the right hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) of 25 May 1993, Official Report, column 750, on the briefing of witnesses from Walter Somers before the Trade and Industry Committee. [15999]

Mr. Newton: The inquiry to which I referred has been completed, and the report was published on 15 February.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he first consulted other Cabinet Ministers about the contents of the report of the Scott inquiry; and where and when such discussions took place and with whom. [16519]

Mr. Newton: It is not the practice to give details of ministerial meetings.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary questions have appeared on the Order Paper in each of the last 30 years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is in the following table:

House of Commons parliamentary questions

Session	Orals total	Written total
1964–65	10,878	8,270
1965–66[1]	4,332	3,646

[1] Unusually short session.

[2] Unusually long session.

From 1972–73 Members were limited to one oral question per Minister. Priority written questions were introduced in the 1972–73 Session.

TREASURY

Tax Allowances

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the savings for each of the next five financial years if (a) the additional value of tax allowances for (i) single and (ii) married pensioners was frozen at the current rate and (b) the allowance was frozen and remained in force only for current pensioners. [15196]

Mr. Jack: An indication of the effects of reducing the additional value of age-related personal allowances and of denying age-related allowances to those who are currently aged below 65 is given in the table. The figures are set at 1996–97 levels and, as an illustrative assumption, the increases in the retail prices index is taken to be 2¼ per cent. for the first year and 2 per cent. in subsequent years. The full-year cost of the age-related component of personal allowances is estimated to be about £960 million at 1996–97 income levels.

Estimated full year yields

(£ million)

Year after the change	Age allowance frozen at current rate	Age allowance frozen and available only for those aged over 65 in year 0
1	70	140
2	140	260
3	200	380
4	260	500
5	330	620

Departmental Sickness Cover

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what procedures are followed by his Department to ensure that when employees fall ill, their functions are fulfilled by other officials. [16197]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 20 February 1996]: When staff are absent from work through illness, any urgent work will be carried out by colleagues within the team. Where it appears that a member of staff will be absent for a prolonged period, the line manager either rearranges the day-to-day work of the team to cover the duties of the absent officer, or puts in a temporary replacement depending on the functions involved.

Reinvestment Relief

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many decisions by local inspectors of taxes on qualifying companies for reinvestment relief have been disallowed by senior tax inspectors; and if he will list those companies that have been declared as not qualifying for reinvestment relief. [17136]

Mr. Jack: Normally, if Inland Revenue has accepted a claim for tax relief, it will not be withdrawn in respect of that particular claim. It is investors, not companies, that qualify for reinvestment relief.

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers have had their reinvestment relief disallowed to date. [17138]

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not collected centrally.

VAT (Sanitary Protection Products)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had in relation to the imposition of VAT at 17.5 per cent. on sanitary protection products for women; what response he has made; what action he is taking; what was the yield of the tax on these products in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [16347]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Because VAT is intended to be a broad-based tax on consumer expenditure generally, sanitary protection products for women have been taxed at the standard rate from the outset. The revenue yield is approximately £35 million a year. Around 160 representations for tax relief have been received since April 1995.

Since the last Labour Government agreed with other EU member states in 1977 that the UK would not extend the scope of its existing zero-rates, there is no possibility now of zero-rating these products.

Mortgage Endowment Policies

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research his Department has evaluated from the major sellers of mortgage endowment policies in respect of estimates of shortfalls of individual policies to meet mortgage commitments. [17476]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 27 February 1996]: The Treasury has carried out no such research. If individual policy holders have concerns, they should review their policy with the issuer of their mortgage endowment policy.

Landfill Tax

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) who will define the types of waste which qualify for the £2 rate as inert or inactive waste under the proposed landfill tax; and by what mechanisms disputes over the definitions will be resolved; [16918]

(2) if he will list the types of waste described under the waste classification scheme which will qualify as inert or inactive waste under the proposed landfill tax. [16917]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Customs and Excise recently carried out a consultation exercise on the scope of the lower rate of landfill tax, which ended on 31 January. The consultation exercise was carried out on a proposal to link the lower rate of tax to wastes listed in category 1 of the proposed UK waste classification scheme, on which the Department of the Environment consulted at the same time.

I expect to receive a report shortly following an analysis by Customs and Excise in consultation with other interested Government Departments. An announcement of the outcome will be made in due course. A list of the wastes that will qualify for the lower rate of landfill tax will be set out in a Treasury order, which will be laid before the House in the summer.

On disputes, the current Finance Bill provides for reviews, and appeals to an independent tribunal by tax payers against decisions by customs relating to tax liability.

Income Tax (Pensioners)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many pensioner households paid income tax in Wales at the latest available date. [17587]

Mr. Jack: Income tax is calculated on the basis of individuals. There are around 500,000 individuals in Wales aged 65 years or over. According to the 1993–94 survey of personal incomes, 130,000 or 26 per cent. of these are taxpayers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17302]

The Attorney-General [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589-606.

Confiscation Unit

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Attorney-General how many full-time staff there are in the confiscation unit of the Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions in Northern Ireland. [17147]

The Attorney-General: The Department of the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland has no separate confiscation unit. Two lawyers on the director's staff are nominated to deal with confiscation as part of their duties.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to strengthen the arrangements for means-testing applicants for legal aid. [18424]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Lord Chancellor has today laid before Parliament regulations which will:

(a) provide those assessing the means of applicants for legal aid with a discretionary power to include in the means assessment the assets of friends, relatives and children where these appear to be providing a significant material advantage to the applicant;

(b) place a limit of £100,000 on the amount of equity value in a house that is ignored in the legal aid means assessment. The regulations also limit the maximum amount of mortgage that can be offset against the equity value of a house to £100,000 and limit the amount of mortgage repayment allowable against income to the amount due on a £100,000 mortgage.

These regulations will come into effect for applications for legal aid made on or after 1 June 1996.

Both these measures are being taken as a result of the consultation exercise on legal aid for the "apparently wealthy" which was undertaken in 1995.

Also as a result of the consultation exercise, the Lord Chancellor announced last year that he intended that a special investigations unit should be established to handle legal aid means assessments where the applicant's financial circumstances are exceptionally complex. He invited the Legal Aid Board to advise him on the feasibility of establishing such a unit.

The Legal Aid Board has now submitted its report and I have placed a copy in the library. The Lord Chancellor has accepted the central recommendations in the report and has invited the Legal Aid Board to take the necessary steps to ensure that the special investigations unit is fully operational as soon as possible.

The special investigations unit will build on the prototype of such a unit set up by the Benefits Agency in its legal aid assessment office at Preston in June 1995. This unit is already investigating certain cases.

Initially, the unit will deal with applications for civil legal aid, but it will be extended as soon as possible to cover both civil and criminal legal aid. Referrals to the unit will be made, in civil cases, by the Legal Aid Board or the existing staff of the legal aid assessment office and, in criminal cases, by the court or court clerk. They will be invited to refer cases to the unit when:

(a) they are of the opinion that the means information provided merits further investigation, verification or expect evaluation by the special investigations unit, and

(b) one or more of the following appears to apply:

(i) the applicant or partner has assets overseas;

(ii) the applicant or partner has access to assets or income apparently owned by others;

(iii) the applicant or partner has a wealthy life style, such as an expensive car, house or jewellery, or is able to indulge in significant foreign travel;

(iv) the applicant or partner has interests in a business with substantial assets;

(v) the applicant or partner has other complex personal financial affairs, which may include persona insolvency or having assets subject to a mareva injunction or an asset freezing order;

(vi) legal claims of significant value are being pursued by or against the applicant or partner;

(vii) the applicant or partner is reputed to have significant income or assets;

(viii) the applicant or partner has re-arranged his or her financial affairs so that he or she now apparently qualifies for legal aid.

The unit will be headed by a qualified accountant and will be empowered to seek outside expert assistance when this seems appropriate.

The Government are fully committed to ensuring that legal aid is granted only to those who are entitled, under the regulations, to receive it, and believe that the establishment, and further development, of the special investigations unit is an important step in meeting that commitment.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he first consulted other Cabinet Ministers about the contents of the report of the Scott inquiry; where and when such discussions took place; and with whom. [16638]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: It is not the practice to give details of ministerial meetings.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers." [17303]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

PRIME MINISTER

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister if information communicated by the United Nations special commission to the International Atomic Energy Agency by Her Majesty's Government on British companies which supplied materials relevant to Iraqi programmes to acquire weapons of mass destruction, was communicated to the Scott inquiry in its entirety. [17321]

The Prime Minister [holding answers 26 February 1996]: Yes, insofar as it related to the period covered by the inquiry's terms of reference.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he received from Ministers at the time he established the Scott inquiry in respect of (a) the remit and (b) the format of the inquiry. [17701]

The Prime Minister: My discussions with Ministers are private.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the Iraq note referred to on page 439 of the Scott report; [17702]

(2) if he will now place in the Library a copy of the information note prepared by his private secretary on 3 December 1990. [17786]

The Prime Minister: This document was submitted as evidence to Sir Richard Scott's inquiry. I understand that Sir Richard Scott proposes to publish as soon as possible any documents which he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what response he plans to make to the representations made by the secretary of the Scott inquiry concerning the nature of statements by various Ministers following the press conference held by Sir Richard Scott on 15 February. [17777]

The Prime Minister: A reply has been sent to the secretary of the inquiry's letter on this matter. As the inquiry's letter has been widely quoted and reproduced in the media, this reply was made public.

The inquiry wrote again subsequently making it clear that Sir Richard's view applied to any summary of his report, whether by Government, Opposition or the media.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place copies of ministerial and departmental responses to the first draft of Sir Richard Scott's report of the inquiry into the sale of arms to Iraq in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [17819]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Departments' closing statements to the Scott inquiry have already been published in part B of volume V of the Scott inquiry report. I understand that Sir Richard Scott proposes to publish as soon as possible documents that he considers relevant to his report, consistent with his procedures. However, paragraph B3.11 of the report records that, in the interests of fairness, Sir Richard does not propose to publish comments submitted by witnesses on the draft report.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all the people who received copies of the Scott report in advance of the official publication date; and if he will make a statement. [17818]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 17 February 1996]: The following Ministers received advance copies of Sir Richard Scott's report: the Prime Minister; the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary; the President of the Board of Trade; the Chief Secretary to the Treasury; the Secretary of State for Defence and the Attorney-General.

In addition, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, the Paymaster General and the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, had access to the report prior to publication, in accordance with the terms laid down by the Scott inquiry.

A small number of civil servants in the main Departments concerned also received advance copies.

Iraq (Defence-related Exports)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Prime Minister when he first learned of the 1988 amendments to the 1985 Howe guidelines into defence-related exports to Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [17821]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 27 February 1996]: The first time I learned that a change in the guidelines had been considered in 1988 was in a minute from my private secretary dated 13 November 1992.

Mr. Omar al Hassan

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in 1994 he met Mr. Omar al Hassan; and if he will make a statement. [17853]

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, once, at a speaking engagement.

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Booth: To ask the Prime Minister what part he envisages that Government will play in relation to the millennium exhibition; and if he will make a statement. [18342]

The Prime Minister: The Government very much welcome the announcement by the Millennium Commission of its decision to stage a national millennium exhibition in Greenwich. This visionary and exciting scheme will enable the whole nation to mark this significant event in a wholly appropriate way. It should also encourage large numbers of overseas visitors to join in our national celebrations during the millennium year.

Arrangements for the millennium exhibition are the responsibility of the independent Millennium Commission. The exhibition will be funded by the Commission from its share of national lottery proceeds and from private sector contributions. Given its scale, the event will, raise many issues to which the Government have to respond.

In order to ensure that the Government's participation in this significant national event is well planned and co-ordinated, I have asked the First Secretary of State and Deputy Prime Minister to convene a ministerial group with the following terms of reference:

"to oversee the Government's role in relation to the Millennium Festival and to take forward any necessary planning of the Government's involvement in this event."

In addition to the chairman, members of the group will be as follows:

Chancellor of the Exchequer

Secretary of State for the Home Department

Secretary of State for the Environment

Secretary of State for Northern Ireland

Secretary of State for National Heritage

Lord Privy Seal

Secretary of State for Transport

Secretary of State for Scotland

Secretary of State for Wales

Other Ministers will be invited to attend for items in which they have a departmental interest.

The Government will do all they can to assist the Millennium Commission to ensure that the millennium festival is an outstanding successful national event.

Hong Kong

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to meet Mr. C. H. Tung, Mr. Rong Yiren, Mr. David Choy, Mr. Tsui Tsin-tong, Mr. George Cardona and Mr. Algy Cluff during his forthcoming visit to Hong Kong. [17864]

The Prime Minister: I hope to meet a broad range of business men, politicians and other opinion formers.

HEALTH

GPs' Expenditure

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will announce the conclusions of the joint review of monitoring and forecasting of general practitioners' expenditure. [17802]

Mr. Malone: There is no such review.

Medium Secure Units

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which regions the five privately owned medium secure registered mental nursing homes visited by the mental Health Act Commission are situated; and what are their names and locations. [16784]

Mr. Bowis: The Mental Health Act Commission sixth biennial report 1993 to 1995 refers to visits to the following five private and charitable medium secure registered nursing homes:

Hospital	Region
Stockton Hall Hospital, The Village, Stockton on the Forest, Yorkshire YO3 9UN	Northern and Yorkshire
Llanarth Court Hospital, Llanarth, Raglan, Gwent NP5 2YD	Wales
St. John's House Hospital, Lion Road, Palgrave, Diss, Norfolk IP22 1BA	Anglia and Oxford
Kneesworth House Hospital, Bassingbourne cum Kneesworth, Royston, Hertfordshire SG8 5JP	Anglia and Oxford
St. Andrew's Hospital, Billing Road, Northampton NN1 5DG	Anglia and Oxford

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17310]

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589-604.

Hospital Closures

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have closed by region in each of the last five years. [18059]

Mr. Horam: The Department does not routinely collect information on hospital closures. Information is available centrally only on proposals to close or change the use of health service facilities which are referred to Ministers for a decision following objections from a community health council. A list of such closures for the period January 1992 to December 1995 is available in the Library, and is updated quarterly.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the hospital closure programme. [18060]

Mr. Horam: The Government do not have a hospital closure programme. Decisions on closing, opening, or significantly changing the use of hospital facilities are for local management.

MRSA

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will name the non-national health service hospitals which have reported methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus infections; [17088]

(2) how monitoring of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus infection in private hospitals, residential and nursing home care is conducted; and what protection from expulsion and exclusion from such facilities is available to clients; [17089]

(3) what number of United Kingdom hospitals have been infected with methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus; what percentage this is of all United Kingdom hospitals; and what mechanism is available to advise the public of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus outbreaks; [17084]

(4) how many persons are known to have been infected, within NHS hospitals, by methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus; and what was the total number of persons infected in the last 12 months for which figures are available; [17085]

(5) if he will name the hospitals in England and Wales which have recorded cases of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus and the number of cases at each hospital. [17086]

Mr. Horam: The public health laboratory service maintains aggregate data on MRSA as part of its national surveillance of communicable disease and infection, compiled from requests submitted by hospitals—both NHS and private—and from the community for the typing of isolates. These aggregate data do not identify individual hospitals or patients.

Information about an outbreak of MRSA will be provided, as required, by the hospital's "Outbreak Control Group".

MRSA is an uncommon cause of infection in the community. However, we shall shortly be issuing guidance on MRSA and infection control in general to the managers of residential and nursing homes and their registration officers.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued on avoidance of cross contamination of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus in NHS patients. [17087]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 22 January, Official Report, columns 16–17.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department is currently undertaking into the incidence of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus; and how many strains have been detected. [17083]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) on 22 January, Official Report, columns 15–16. The public health laboratory service has described 16 strains of epidemic methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths in the last 12 months for which figures are available resulted from methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus infection. [17092]

Mr. Horam: In 1994, the latest year for which figures are available, there were a total of 102 deaths from staphylococcal infection, of which eight resulted from methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus.

Mental Health Challenge Fund

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what priority will be given to bids for mental health challenge fund applications by those authorities that are over target according to the weighted capitation allocation formula. [17753]

Mr. Bowis: Bids from over target health authorities will be given the highest priority.

Capitation Targets

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the percentage capitation target according to the weighted capitation allocation formula of each health authority in England. [17752]

Mr. Horam: A table showing planned 1996–97 health authority distance from targets in percentage terms will be placed in the Library.

Vinney Green Secure Unit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will institute an inquiry into allegations of bribery at Vinney Green secure unit, Mangotsfield, Avon. [17847]

Mr. Bowis: I am not aware of any allegations of bribery involving staff or residents at Vinney Green secure unit.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures she proposes to ensure her Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17312]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Marketing Awareness Programme

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the religious breakdown of employees in the marketing awareness programme. [14054]

Mr. Ancram: The Local Enterprise Development Unit does not monitor the religious affiliation of individuals participating in the marketing awareness programme as they are involved as representatives of the company. The monitoring of the religious composition of companies is a matter for the Fair Employment Commission.

Sinn Fein

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations have been made to the United States Government regarding visa applications from Sinn Fein members to travel to the United States since 9 February. [16349]

Mr. Ancram: A decision on applications for visas to visit the United States is a matter for the US Government. We have informed the US Government of the changed circumstances of our contacts with Sinn Fein as a result of the breakdown in the IRA ceasefire.

£1 Coin

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 792, what factors led him not to submit his decision on the choice of a Celtic torc and a Celtic cross as symbols representative of Northern Ireland on the new £1 coin, to his Department's policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines. [16745]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The PAFT guidelines apply to the formulation of policy and delivery of services to the public. They would not normally be applied in the case of a consultation on the design of coins, where decisions are made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. In any event, the consultation of the new £1 coin preceded the issue of the PAFT guidelines.

Ulster Dialect Dictionary

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set out the costs to date of the Ulster dialect dictionary project at the Ulster folk and transport museum in terms of (a) staff and (b) computer systems; if he will make a statement on the future of this project; and what plans he has for the future of the equipment and the archives in the event of discontinuance. [16747]

Mr. Ancram: The costs to date of staff have been £171,712, whilst the computer system has cost £37,745.

It is planned that the dictionary will be available to all schools for the 1996–97 school year. The database and equipment will be retained by the Ulster folk and transport museum. Future development will be a matter in the first instance for the museum.

Terrorist Bombs

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has received as to the controls on sale or distribution of ingredients for the manufacture of terrorist bombs, and their equivalent, in the Irish Republic; and what assessment each jurisdiction has made as to their adequacy. [16746]

Sir John Wheeler: The principal and most common ingredient used by terrorists in Northern Ireland to make bombs has been ammonium nitrate based agricultural fertiliser. The Explosives Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1972 prohibit fertilisers containing more than 79 per cent. ammonium nitrate by weight except under licence issued by the Secretary of State. Broadly equivalent legislation applies in the Irish Republic.

As with all counter-terrorist legislation in Northern Ireland, the 1972 regulations are kept under review to ensure that they are appropriate to the prevailing situation and can be effectively enforced.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16887]

Sir John Wheeler: Details of current interests declared by officials of the various Northern Ireland civil service departments are held on that individual's personal file. A central list of such interests is not held and to obtain this information from personal files would incur disproportionate costs.

Civil servants faced with a conflict of interest must declare their interest to senior management so that senior management can determine how best to proceed. This requirement is set out in the respective management codes of the home civil service and the Northern Ireland civil service covering pay and conditions.

Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer.

As NICS departmental circumstances are so different I would not propose to establish a central register of officials' interests. Officials will continue to register such interests within their own Department, as necessary.

Divorce Law

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will estimate the costs of the research the Government have commissioned into divorce law in Northern Ireland; and if he will indicate the names of the people and the bodies involved. [17114]

Sir John Wheeler: It is estimated that the cost of the research project on divorce law in Northern Ireland will be in the region of £35,000. The research team consisted of the following members.

Mr. Ciaran White, Lecturer in Law, School of Public Policy, Economics and Law, University of Ulster at Jordanstown.

Ms Monica McWilliams, Senior Lecturer, School of Social Community Sciences.

Ms Claire Archbold, Lecturer in Law at The Queen's University of Belfast.

Dr. Brendan Murtagh, School of Social and Community Science, University of Ulster at Magee.

Mrs. Pat McKee, Senior Computing Officers, School of Public Policy, Economics and Law, University of Ulster at Jordanstown.

Law Commission

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ask the Law Commission in future to consult with his Department on every new project with a view to having its research and consultation include Northern Ireland. [17116]

Sir John Wheeler: I regret that I am unable to do so. The Law Commission's remit under the Law Commission Act 1965 specifically excludes any law which the Northern Ireland Assembly could have power to amend.

We are however committed to ensuring that the law of Northern Ireland is kept under review. The independent civil law reform function is carried out by the Law Reform Advisory Committee for Northern Ireland set up by the then Secretary of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) in 1989 in response to representations from the Law Society of Northern Ireland for an independent element in the law reform process. The committee consists mainly of senior lawyers and senior members of the judiciary and is chaired by a Lord Justice of Appeal. Its remit is to keep the civil law of Northern Ireland under review and make recommendations for its reform to my right hon. and learned Friend. As part of its working methods the committee counts widely with local interested bodies and has regular contact with the Law Commission on matters of mutual interest.

The Northern Ireland Office also maintains regular contact with the Law Commission and initiates parallel consultation in appropriate instances where the law under consideration is similar to that in Northern Ireland. We arranged last year for its consultation paper on hearsay and related matters to be circulated in Northern Ireland.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the Northern Ireland Instruments relating to domestic violence; and what consideration he has given to incorporating Northern Ireland into the Family Law Bill. [17118]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland statutory instruments relating to domestic violence are as follows:

Domestic Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order 1980 (NI.5)

Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 (NI.2)

Matrimonial and Family Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (NI.4)

Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 (NI.15)

Rent (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 (NI.20)

Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 (NI.26)

Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (NI.12).

The Government, after careful consideration, have taken the decision that the Family Law Bill should not extend to Northern Ireland. With regard to the reasons for not extending the divorce provisions in part II of the Bill, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I give him on 23 November 1995, Official Report, columns 301-02.

As to part III of the Bill—that is, the matrimonial homes and domestic violence provisions—the Government take the view that since there are a number of aspects of the law of Northern Ireland which vary from that of England and Wales extension of this part of the Bill is undesirable. It is also the case that direct extension would create considerable drafting difficulties. The resulting complexity of the Bill would have the effect of making the legislation more difficult to use for those seeking its protection.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what circumstances the Housing Executive has power to ascertain the name of the ultimate beneficial private landlord whose tenant is being paid housing benefit; and for what reasons these powers are not routinely used. [17117]

Mr. Moss: The information obtained by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in respect of all claims from private tenants for housing benefit includes the name and address of the estate agent, if appropriate and the owner. The estate agent or owner is also required to complete and sign a certificate giving his name and address as well as that of the claimant.

Investors' Visits

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many visits have been made to each council area by (a) investors seeking a site for manufacturing industry and (b) investors seeking a site for service or retail facilities, in which his Department or the Industrial Development Board were involved; and in what order the council areas were visited in each case for each of the last three years; [15769]

(2) what was the number of visits made to each parliamentary constituency in Belfast by investors seeking a site for (a) manufacturing industry and (b) service or retailing facilities, in which his Department or the IDB were involved; and in what order the constituencies were visited in each of the last three years. [15768]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not available and could be provided only at a disproportionate costs. However, visits made to Northern Ireland district council areas by potential investors in the last three years are detailed in the table.

Visits to Northern Ireland by potential investors

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cuba

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from organisations (a) within and (b) outside the United Kingdom concerning the treatment and condition of pensioners in Cuba; and what discussions he has held on these matters. [17201]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None, other than letters just received from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher) and for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Robinson) to which separate replies will be sent.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) the EU on the blockade on Cuba. [17203]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We consider the US embargo against Cuba to be primarily a matter for the two Governments concerned. We do, however, protest strongly and frequently to the Americans about the extra-territorial aspects of the embargo and are lobbying hard against the draft legislation currently before Congress which seeks to tighten the embargo.

There is no common EU policy on the embargo.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) the United Nations and (b) the United States of America regarding the blockade on Cuba. [17202]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have traditionally abstained at the UN General Assembly on the Cuban-tabled resolution against the US embargo. This is because we think it is primarily a bilateral matter and that the UNGA is not the correct forum in which it should be discussed.

I refer the hon. Member to my previous answer.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS, indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17446]

Mr. Hanley: We currently have only one contract with EDS, awarded on 2 February 1996 at the value of £11,950 and expiring in March 1996.

United Nations

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the United Kingdom's annual contribution to the United Nations' regular budget in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [17523]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The UK's annual contribution to the United Nations's regular budget in each of the last five years was as follows:

1991: $44,775,548 (£25,598,167)

1992: $49,437,6754 (£28,260,694)

1993: $51,229,662 (£33,820,091)

1994: $51,067,778 (£34,755,641)

1995: $57,589,390 (£36,414,616)

The UK continues to pay its assessed contributions to the UN promptly and in full and encourages others to do likewise.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people are currently detained in Hong Kong. [17658]

Mr. Hanley: On 23 February 1996, there were 19,499 Vietnamese in detention in Hong Kong.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese boat people have been deported from Hong Kong in each of the last three years. [17659]

Mr. Hanley: The breakdown of Vietnamese who have returned to Vietnam from Hong Kong since 1993 is as follows:

	Voluntary repatriation	Orderly repatriation	Deportation
1993	12,301	375	75
1994	5,581	242	116
1995	1,668	858	112
1996[1]	552	218	14

[1] To 23 February.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the past 12 months the Governor of Hong Kong invited (a) Mr. C. H. Tung, (b) Mr. Rong Yiren, (c) Mr. David Choy, (d) Mr. Tsui Tsin-tong, (e) Mr. George Cardona and (f) Mr. Algy Cluff to (i) receptions, (ii) lunches and (iii) dinners. [17865]

Mr. Hanley: The Governor has naturally met some of these people on a number of occasions in the course of his official duties.

EU Foreign and Security Policy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he intends to table at the 1996 intergovernmental conference to make the European pillar of common foreign and security policy more effective; and if he will make a statement. [17779]

Mr. David Davis: We have already made a number of proposals for improving the effectiveness of the common foreign and security policy including ways of strengthening the roles of the Political Committee and Council secretariat. Our proposals were sent to the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee on 7 June 1995. Our approach to making CFSP more effective will be set out in more detail on the forthcoming White Paper on the intergovernmental conference.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of allegations that the United Kingdom breached its obligations in regard to article II of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in trade with Iraq since 1979. [17699]

Mr. David Davis: Article II of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty confers obligations on non-nuclear weapon states party to the treaty not to obtain or manufacture nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices, or seek or receive any assistance in their manufacture. The United Kingdom is a nuclear-weapon state and the obligations under article II of the treaty are therefore not directly relevant.

Chechnya

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Chechnya; and what plans he has to visit the country. [17526]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We do not maintain relations with Chechnya, which is recognised internationally as part of the Russian Federation. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has no plans to visit Chechnya.

Former Yugoslavia (Refugees)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the safety of refugees in the United Kingdom returning to the states of the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [17384]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We closely monitor the security situation in the former Yugoslavia.

We share the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' view that returns should take place in conditions of safety. As well as making our own assessments, we are in close touch with the UNHCR who has undertaken to provide information on the security, political, economic and social situation prevailing in the area to which return is planned.

East Timor

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to raise the issue of human rights and self-determination for East Timor during the forthcoming Europe-Asia summit in Bangkok; and if he will make a statement. [17764]

Mr. Hanley: We regularly raise our concerns about East Timor and human rights with Indonesian Ministers. We are still waiting for confirmation of whether time will permit an opportunity for bilateral discussion with Indonesia during the Asia-Europe meeting in Bangkok.

Hussein Kamel

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration was given to prosecuting Hussein Kamel as a war criminal. [17873]

Mr. Hanley: None. There is no war crimes tribunal at the United Nations for Iraqi war criminals.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the reasons for Hussein Kamel's return to Iraq. [17875]

Mr. Hanley: We do not know why Hussein Kamel decided to return to Iraq. Reports that he was killed on 23 February show that his decision was ill-conceived and that he fatally underestimated the brutality of Saddam Hussein.

Omar al Hassan

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from Mr. Omar al Hassan; and if he will make a statement. [17854]

Mr. Hanley: Officials from this Department have had occasional contact with Dr. al Hassan, in his capacity as director of the Gulf Centre for Strategic Studies.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money will be paid by the British Railways Board, subsidiaries of the British Railways Board, and other Government–owned railway companies in subscriptions to the Association of Train Operating Companies in (a) the current financial year and (b) the next financial year. [16982]

Mr. Watts: Subscriptions paid to the Association of Train Operating Companies will amount to £1.129 million this financial year and £1.220 million next financial year.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16879]

Mr. Norris: In accordance with service-wide rules, the Department's staff handbook requires staff to declare to line managers any business or financial interests which they or immediate members of their families hold, which they would be able to further as a result of their official position. Staff must then follow any departmental instructions regarding the retention, disposal, or management of such interests. However, it is not departmental policy to disclose information given in confidence by staff.

Copies of written declarations and subsequent advice from line managers are retained on the individuals' personal files. This arrangement works satisfactorily but the need for a central register will be kept under review.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17319]

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Seat Belts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (1) action he intends to take to ensure that the manufacturers of the Ford Fiesta cars registered G or H recall all the cars with defective seat belt mechanisms; and if he will make a statement; [17398]

(2) what action he intends to take concerning allegations of defective seat belts on Ford Fiesta cars registered G or H; [17400]

(3) what representations he has received concerning defects on seat belts on Ford Fiesta carts registered G or H; [17401]

(4) what investigations the Vehicle Certification Agency has carried out to ensure that the seatbelts of Ford Fiesta cars registered G and H function efficiently and correctly; [17396]

(5) what proposals he is considering to include an examination of the inertia reel of seat belts in the Ministry of Transport test. [17393]

Mr. Norris: The Department's Vehicle Inspectorate has received a small number of reports of seat belts failing to work correctly in Ford Fiesta cars. All have come from the Driving Standards Agency and relate to cars which have been used on driving tests. This is currently being investigated in conjunction with the vehicle manufacturer. It would be premature to decide on a course of action until the Vehicle Inspectorate's investigations are complete.

I hope that the matter will be resolved quickly.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of injuries to driving examiners have resulted from defects in seat belts on the car on which the test is taking palace for each year since 1988; if he will name the make, model and year of manufacture; and what measures he proposes to take to protect such examiners. [17392]

Mr. Norris: The circumstances surrounding injuries to examiners on test were not recorded in this sort of detail in the past. The Driving Standards Agency is aware of nine cases of injuries to driving examiners on test which were allegedly attributable to defects with seat belts in 1994, and seven during 1995. The agency's new accident reporting system, introduced this month, will provide for more detailed recording and analysis.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to take to protect driving examiners conducting driving tests in G or H registered Ford Fiesta cars. [17398]

Mr. Norris: In addition to instructions to examiners about avoiding injuries on driving tests, and the new accident reporting system being implemented this month, the Driving Standards Agency will be reporting to the Vehicle Inspectorate information which indicates a potential fault in a vehicle component.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of injuries to driving examiners have resulted from defects on seat belts on ford Fiesta cars registered G or H. [17399]

Mr. Norris: The Driving Standards Agency's records show that, since mid-1994, there have been six cases which were attributed to alleged defects in seat belts on those vehicles.

Emergency Towing

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the emergency towing study team report. [17805]

Mr. Norris: The report will be published shortly and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Bus Working Group

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the membership of the bus working group; who attended its last meeting; and which organisations they represent. [17139]

Mr. Norris: Under my chairmanship, the bus working group comprises representatives form the Confederation of Passenger Transport, the Joint Local Authority Associations and the National Federation of Bus Users. Officials from the Department of Transport and the Scottish and Welsh Offices also attend. In addition to me and officials, the following attended the most recent meeting of the group, held on 20 November:

Local authority representatives

Councillor M. Dowd—Association of Metropolitan Authorities

Councillor M. Ingram—Public Transport Consortium of Non Metropolitan Counties

Councillor M. Nash—Association of County Councils

Councillor B. White—Association of District Councils

Mr. B. Dobbs—Association of County Councils

Mr. J. Carr—Association of Metropolitan Authorities

Mr. G. Ball—Association of Metropolitan Authorities

Mr. R. Bristow—Association of County Councils

Mr. V. Christie—Association of District Councils

Mr. W. Tyson—Association of Metropolitan Authorities

Mr. S. Lockley—Convention of Scottish Local Authorities

Mr. A. Elmer—Association of Metropolitan Authorities

Confederation of Passenger Transport

Mrs. V. Palmer

Mr. E Hesketh

Mr. T. Smallwood

Mr. D. Flower

National Federation of Bus Users

Dr. C. Cahm

Mr. J. Cartledge

Jubilee Line Extension

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what penalties will be exacted from contractors building the Jubilee line extension by London Underground Ltd. in the case of late completion. [17741]

Mr. Norris: The details of any such penalties are a matter for London Underground Ltd. In assessing such penalties, LUL will take into account any mitigating factors.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is London Underground's current estimate of the delay in completing the Jubilee line extension. [17742]

Mr. Norris: London Underground is still aiming for the extension to be completed in early 1998, as planned.

Central Railway

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 128, what matters were discussed with Central Railway when he met it on 17 January. [17167]

Mr. Watts: The meeting discussed applications by Central Railway plc for directions by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under rule 12 of the Transport and Works (Applications and Objections Procedure) Rules 1992 granting absolute, partial or conditional waivers from compliance with certain rules. The company subsequently decided to withdraw these applications and to re-submit them in a modified form. We have given no assurance that any rule 12 directions will be given in respect of any fresh waiver applications.

Royal Train

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people are employed on a (a) full-time and (b) part-time basis to run, clean, maintain and service the royal train. [17791]

Mr. Watts: Eleven full-time and four part-time staff are employed to run, clean, maintain and service the royal train. Other staff employed by Rail Express Systems Ltd., Railtrack plc and other companies, undertake work related to the royal train as part of their normal duties, as and when needed. For example, certain administrative staff plan individual journeys and train crews are allocated on a train-by-train basis.

Rail Passenger Fare Revenue

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was at constant prices the declared revenue from passenger fares of the train operating companies already franchised and currently offered for franchising in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [17168]

Mr. Watts: The information requested is contained in following the table:

£ million

Train operating company	Passenger revenue (at 1995 prices) year ended:
	31 March 1994	31 March 1995
Anglia Railways Train Services Ltd.	32.0	34.0

Borga Incident

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the report of the marine accident investigation branch into the grounding of the Borga off St. Anne's head in October 1995; and if he will make a statement. [17807]

Mr. Norris: A report will be published by the marine accident investigation branch.

Sea Empress Incident

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the reports he received from (a) the port authorities, (b) his inspectors and (c) Her Majesty's Coastguard about the Sea Empress vessel; and if he will make a statement. [17662]

Mr. Norris: No reports have been received from port authorities. MAIB inspectors have made three informal reports to Ministers on general matters related to their investigation. The Coastguard Agency has made numerous reports to Ministers on the incident, in writing, orally and via a video conferencing facility.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what have been the total payments made to date by his Department to the channel tunnel rail link project team. [17249]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Union Railways is the Government-owned company which has developed the channel tunnel rail link project. Union Railways has spent £47 million on the project to date.

Ms Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) consultants and (b) other employees are currently employed by the channel tunnel rail link project teams. [17248]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 27 February 1996]: As at 9 February 1996, Union Railways retained 166 individual consultants and 470 other employees.

Ms Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total payments made to date by his Department to (a) consultants, (b) outside organisations and (c) individuals for work on the channel tunnel rail link scheme indicating the name of the body involved and the services provided. [17247]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 27 February 1996]: The information relates to work on the route announced by the then Secretary of State in October 1991. My Department has made use of the consultants listed in table 1. The total expenditure on these consultants amounts to approximately £8.75 million excluding VAT but including expenses. Some expenditure has been incurred in addition to this for legal advice on the implications of the project for railway privatisation, but this is ascribed to the privatisation programme and not to the rail link. Details of payments to individual firms are commercially confidential. No payments have been made by the Department to organisations or individuals not listed in the table except for Union Railways, expenditure by whom is the subject of a separate answer given today to the hon. Member.

Table 1: Consultants retained by Department of Transport in respect of Channel Tunnel Rail Link project

Tug Provision

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on emergency tug provision in the western approaches. [17861]

Mr. Norris: The emergency towing study carried out for the Coastguard Agency last year stated that there are tugs at a number of ports in the south-west and in south and west Wales, including Falmouth, Fowey, Milford Haven, Port Talbot and Avonmouth. The Coastguard Agency continues to keep the supply of emergency tugs under review. In deciding future deployment, we will take into account experience of the Government-funded provision of tugs at Dover and Stornoway this winter and of liaison arrangements with tug operation. Any relevant findings of the investigations into the Sea Empress incident will also be taken into account.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department will respond to the report on tug provision around the UK coast which it received in June 1995. [17860]

Mr. Norris: Having taken account of the report and other available information, the Coastguard Agency announced on 25 October 1995 that emergency tugs would be stationed at Dover and at Stornoway for six months from 1 November 1995.

Oil Tanker Shipping Lanes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review oil tanker shipping lanes around the United Kingdom coastline and in United Kingdom waters; and if he will make a statement. [16812]

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency has undertaken maritime traffic surveys using mobile radar. We shall continue to consider the effectiveness of existing ship routeing and reporting measures, and the need for any new measures, in the light of those surveys.

Single European Currency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 574, when he expects to assess the impact of a single European currency on freight and passenger transport to and from the continent. [16969]

Mr. Watts: The United Kingdom will agree to take part in a single currency only if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time. A full assessment of the benefits and disadvantages will be carried out nearer the time, before the decision is made.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Supply Network

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, columns 404–405, if he will publish the quarterly monitoring reports obtained from each regional supply network and the national totals. [15686]

Mr. Page [holding answer 20 February 1996]: Reports based on the monitoring information collected from regional supply network offices will be made available on a quarterly basis. The first of these reports will be placed in the Library of the House in June 1996 and quarterly thereafter. The first report will supply information for the first year of regional supply network operation and for business link operations in the 1995–96 financial year. The performance of an individual regional supply office is a commercial matter for that office and information about individual offices will, therefore, not be included in the report.

Naval Sonar Equipment Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what goods have been exported under the export licence for naval sonar equipment approved at an interdepartmental meeting on 28 June 1988. [16312]

Mr. Lang: The application approved at the IDC on 28 June 1988 was an arms working party application inquiring about the supply of 360 degree naval sonar to Iraq. The approval given to that application simply indicated that, should the company submit an export licence application, it was likely that it would be granted. It did not give the company authority to export these goods.

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the amount of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's exposure in trade with Iraq (a) at the beginning of December 1988 and (b) at the end of December 1989; and what was the largest sum this Export Credits Guarantee Department exposure reached. [16654]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 22 February 1996]: ECGD estimated its maximum potential exposure on Iraq at £900 million at the end of 1988 and at £1,150 million at the end of 1989.

ECGD's highest estimate of its maximum potential exposure on Iraq was £1,260 million in September 1986.

Maximum potential exposure is calculated on the assumption of full utilisation of credit facilities, but taking into account repayments. Current exposure is £652 million. The difference is accounted for by a mixture of repayments since 1989, together with facilities not being fully utilised.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what have been the costs of the Scott inquiry in respect of (a) press and communications, (b) legal aid bills, (c) printing and publications, (d) administration and (e) telephone bills. [17048]

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

(a) The cost of press and communications in respect of the Scott inquiry is not readily quantifiable. Sir Richard Scott has had a full time press officer allocated to his team, and various officers of departmental press offices have been involved as the normal course of their duties required. The cost of purchasing copies of Sir Richard Scott's report for the media was £18,000.

(b) As far as I am aware, no individual received legal aid in connection with their appearance as a witness to the Scott inquiry. The total amount paid by Government in legal advice for witnesses to the inquiry to date is £1,210,000.

(c) HMSO normally bears the costs of printing, publishing and distributing all parliamentary publications, with the overall aim of recovering these from sales revenue. However, in this case, and at the request of Sir Richard Scott, my Department has agreed to pay a subsidy in the region of £85,000 so that the cover price can be contained at a level which ensures that the report is as accessible as possible to the general public.

(d) The administration costs of Sir Richard Scott's inquiry team to date amount to £153,000. This includes the cost of office machinery and computers as well as stationery, typing etc. but does not include salary costs of the staff in the inquiry team.

(e) Records are not kept in such a way as to quantify the size of the telephone bills relating to the Scott inquiry.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the creditors of BCCI will receive their payments. [17348]

Mr. Oppenheim: The payment of the first dividend remains subject to the resolution of court proceedings in Luxembourg and the Cayman islands. The liquidators hope to be able to make such a payment by the summer of this year.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current level of fees paid to the solicitors to the liquidators of BCCI. [17347]

Mr. Oppenheim: The fees paid to solicitors by the English liquidators of BCCI in the year to 15 January 1996, the fourth year of the liquidation, totalled approximately £5.2 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the current level of fees paid to the liquidators of BCCI Touche Ross. [17346]

Mr. Oppenheim: Total fees authorised for the English liquidators for the year to 15 January 1996, the fourth year of the liquidation, amounted to £9.4 million.

Textile Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were employed in the textile industry making colour woven fabric in each year since 1987. [17794]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on the number employed in the textile industry making colour woven fabric is not available. Information on employment in the textile weaving industry is available for 1991 and 1993 when 14,000 and 13,200 people respectively were employed in the industry in Great Britain.

Invest in Britain Bureau

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many inward investment projects have settled in England as a result of guidance given by the Invest in Britain Bureau over the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [17729]

Mr. Eggar: Although the IBB can offer guidance to potential investors, the final decision on where to invest rests solely with the company. The following table shows numbers of projects that have located in England over the last three financial years, where the Invest in Britain Bureau has had a significant involvement.

Year	Number of England projects
1992–93	38
1993–94	63
1994–95	56

Export Controls

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what priority he accords to foreign policy objectives in establishing export controls. [17362]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The Government attach considerable importance to their foreign policy objectives in establishing export controls.

Fan Clubs

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recourse is open to people who do not receive advertised services from fan clubs to which they have paid money. [17550]

Mr. John M. Taylor: People who do not receive services for which they have paid have recourse under civil law for breach of contract. They could take legal advice on how to take the matter forward from their local citizen's advice bureau or law centre or a solicitor. Their local authority trading standards department may also be able to intervene if an offence has been committed under legislation which it is responsible for enforcing.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to license fan clubs. [17549]

Mr. Taylor: I have no plans to do so.

EC Funding

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the EC rules for designating a region in a member state for the purposes of (a) objectives 1, 2 and 3 funding and (b) other structural funding; and if each individual member can unilaterally designate (a) an offshore island and (b) other small areas as a region to enable it to qualify for funding. [17135]

Mr. Oppenheim: The criteria for eligibility for objective 1 grants from the EC structural funds are set out in article 8 of Council regulation (EEC) 2052/88 as amended by Council regulation (EEC) 2081/93—OJL 193, 31.7.93. The criteria and procedures for designation for eligibility for objective 2 grants are set out in article 9.

Eligibility for objective 3 grants is not defined geographically.

The objective 1 areas are listed in an annex to the regulation, and are therefore decided by the Council. Objective 2 areas are decided by the Commission following proposals from the member states. Member states cannot designate areas unilaterally.

Coal Industry

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what responsibilities the Coal Authority has to meet the cost of keeping Markham Main and the other Coal Investment collieries on a care and maintenance basis until a new licensee is found; [17175]

(2) what plans the Coal Authority has to invite new licensees to tender for Markham Main and other Coal Investment collieries. [17176]

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the Coal Authority.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what equipment not classified as military but having military applications is currently being exported from the United Kingdom to Indonesia; and if he will take steps to halt such supplies or orders. [17226]

Mr. Oppenheim: There is a vast range of manufactured products capable of military use, only a small proportion of which are licensable.

In respect of licensable goods, it has been the practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of export licenses or applications for export licenses.

Official Receivers

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the contracting-out exercise of the case administration functions of official receivers, begun by the Insolvency Service in July 1993, has now been completed; and if he will make a statement. [18035]

Mr. Oppenheim: The Government announced in October 1994 that, following the completion of pre-feasibility and feasibility studies, it was their intention to pursue, subject to parliamentary approval of the appropriate primary and secondary legislation, the preferred option identified by the then consultants ie the contracting out of insolvency casework by official receivers immediately on the making of the insolvency order.

Advertisements for potential bidders were placed in May 1995 and resulted in the receipt of 149 expressions of interest. One hundred and thirty-six passed through to the next stage and were sent the requirements scoping document. Ninety-one organisations went on to submit initial proposals, 34 of which were selected to participate in negotiations with the Insolvency Service. Following these negotiations, a further sift was carried out and an invitation to tender was issued to six organisations—two managed service providers and four insolvency practitioner-accountants—and formal tenders were received from all six at the beginning of December. Three—Capita Managed Services Ltd., ITnet Ltd. and Larking Gowen—were identified as possibly being able to offer value for money and a final series of discussions were held with them.

The three bids were subjected to stringent technical and financial evaluation and were considered by the Agency Steering Board, particularly the independent, private sector members.

The aim of the contracting-out process is to ensure that people receive the best service for the most reasonable price whether it is provided by the public or private sector. In this instance, having considered very carefully the evaluation of the bids and the advice of the steering board, I have concluded on these grounds that the case administration functions of official receivers should not be contracted out.

I congratulate the service and its staff on the service's performance in recent years during which its unit costs have been substantially reduced while its investigative role has been enhanced. This exercise has confirmed the value of money of the service's operation for the taxpayer and I look to it to continue to deliver improvements in the future.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to make the decision regarding the contracting out of the work of the official receiver; and when this decision will be announced to the House. [17468]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 February 1996]: As I informed the House in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire), having carefully considered the technical and financial evaluation of the bids and the recommendation of the Agency Steering Board, I have concluded that the case administration functions should not be contracted out and the work should remain with official receivers.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what involvement Dr. Alan Kemp has had in the contracting out of the work of the official receiver. [17466]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Dr. Kemp had no involvement in the contracting out exercise undertaken by the Insolvency Service.

Arrangements were introduced to ensure that any papers concerning this matter which were sent to the then President of the Board of Trade were withheld from Dr. Kemp.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many bidders for the work of the Insolvency Service who have been rejected have had insolvency experience; [17471]

(2) how many bidders for the work of the Insolvency Service who are still being considered have insolvency experience. [17470]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Of the six tenders received for the work of official receivers, four were submitted by insolvency practitioner-accountancy firms and two by managed service providers.

However, as I informed the House in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire), having carefully considered the technical and financial evaluation of the bids and the recommendation of the Agency Steering Board, I have concluded that the case administration functions should not be contracted out and the work should remain with official receivers.

Public Interest Disclosure Bill

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many responses his Department has received on (a) the Public Interest Disclosure Bill and (b) the Whistleblower Protection Bill; in each case how many (i) were in support of each Bill and (ii) indicated that each Bill would pose an undue burden on business; and if he will list those organisations which did not respond in confidence. [17535]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Up to 26 February, my Department has received 34 letters, all supporting the Public Interest Disclosure Bill. Of these, 29 were from individuals, two from general secretaries of trade unions and three from national organisations. No letters were received by my Department about the Whistleblower Protection Bill.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultations his Department has undertaken on the Public Interest Disclosure Bill. [17536]

Mr. Taylor: No public consultation has been undertaken by my Department on the Public Interest Disclosure Bill.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Hicks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the number of applications that have been made for regional selective assistance, (b) the number approved, (c) the total financial value of the approved applications and (d) the average time taken to process and approve the applications in the last three years for which figures are available in each United Kingdom assisted area. [16978]

Mr. Oppenheim: In the period 1 April 1992 to 31 March 1995 the figures for Great Britain were:

Assisted area	Number of applications received	Number of applications approved	Value of applications approved (£ million)	Average processing time (working days)
East	75	47	3.0	30
East Midlands	202	111	11.2	56
London	60	44	3.1	42
Merseyside	404	267	46.4	52
North East	829	635	95.8	25
North West	893	740	66.7	39
South East	96	72	5.1	41
South West	320	230	32.8	50
West Midlands	892	635	68.7	25
York and Humberside	615	440	53.4	35
Scotland	860	719	333.1	32
Wales	721	583	236.7	40

Single European Currency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 42, when he intends to make a precise judgment on the impact of a single European currency on United Kingdom trade. [16970]

Mr. Oppenheim: The United Kingdom will agree to take part in a single currency only if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time. A full assessment of the benefits and disadvantages will be carried out nearer the time, before the decision is made.

Water Companies

Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much water plcs have spent in takeovers or mergers with (a) electricity companies and (b) other companies. [17477]

Mr. John M. Taylor: This information is not known to my right hon. Friend.

Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much European regional development fund funding has been allocated to Merseyside since it acquired objective 1 status; what percentage has so far been spent; and if he will make a statement. [15545]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Under the Merseyside objective 1 programme, the amount of European regional development fund allocated for 1994 and 1995 is £104 million. The amount of ERDF claims paid to date is £13.6 million.

The first ERDF projects under objective 1 were approved in late 1994. Given this, and the lead time for large capital projects, the profile of grant payments was expected to be low for the early part of the programme. One hundred and forty-one projects now have full approval to spend and claim grant, and recipients are being encouraged to take them forward promptly.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many written parliamentary questions were passed for answer to executive agencies and non-governmental departments in each of the last five years; and if she will make a statement. [14993]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is a matter of public record, but could be extracted in the form requested only at disproportionate cost.

Compulsory Sex Education

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what scope exists for Ofsted to examine whether compulsory sex education under the Education Act 1993 adheres to the requirements of sections 28 and 29 of the Local Government Act 1993. [16752]

Mr. Paice: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to section 2A of the Local Government Act 1986—as inserted by section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988. Section 2A applies to the activities of local authorities and not to individual schools. It is not legislation with which school sex education must comply and is not therefore included within the scope of Ofsted's inspections of schools.

Unskilled Home Workers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she will publish the results of the research carried out on behalf of her Department into unskilled home workers, referred to by the Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs in his oral statement of 26 January, Official Report, column 585. [17394]

Mr. Forth: The research results will be published on behalf of the Department for Education and Employment by HMSO. Publication of the report, entitled "Homeworkers in Britain", is scheduled for Thursday 4 April 1996.

Roots and Wings Monitoring Scheme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people at school in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands are involved in the roots and wings monitoring scheme; and what proposals she has to encourage the development of the scheme in Coventry. [17121]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not held centrally. The Government continue to encourage the development of effective links between business and education, which can help young people reach their highest potential and meet employers' needs for a well-qualified and motivated work force. Activities at local level are normally co-ordinated through education business partnerships involving senior representatives from employers, education and the local community.

Schools (Management and Administration Costs)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 735, if she will give the management and administration cost per pupil in each local education authority in England. [17134]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table provides the information requested, for the financial year 1995–96.

1. The figures have been calculated by dividing planned expenditure on management and adminsitration, as recorded in each LEA's LMS budget statement for 1995–96, by pupil numbers from the same source.

2. The amount per pupil is rounded to the nearest pound.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures she proposes to ensure her Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17307]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Capita Managed Services Ltd.

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance has been given to Capita Managed Services Ltd. to (a) ensure and (b) monitor a fair and equitable allocation of nursery education places. [17218]

Mr. Robin Squire: No such guidance has been given. Capita Managed Services has no role in the allocation of nursery places.

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for (a) each of the constituent nations of the United Kingdom and (b) the United Kingdom in constant prices the amount of Government expenditure allocated for 1994–95, 1995–96 and that anticipated for 1996–97 for the access to work scheme, indicating in each case the percentage year on year change. [17556]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 28 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about expenditure allocated to Access to Work for 1994/95, 1995/96 and 1996/97.

Access to Work began in June 1994. The annex gives the initial allocation for Access to Work for England, Scotland and Wales for the period requested. In 1995/96, as in 1994/95, we will spend more than the allocation. The total allocation is for Great Britain as the Access to Work programme does not extend to Northern Ireland.

I hope this is helpful.

Access to Work initial allocation (£ million) at 1994–95 prices

	1994–95	1995–96	1996–97
England	12.4	10.8	10.7
Percentage change	—	–13 per cent.	–1 per cent.
Scotland	1.2	1.3	0.9
Percentage change	—	+8 per cent.	–31 per cent.
Wales	1.0	0.9	0.6
Percentage change	—	–10 per cent.	–33 per cent.
GB total	14.6	13.0	12.2
Percentage change	—	–11 per cent.	–6 per cent.

1. Access to Work began on 6 June 1994. The 1994–95 figure includes expenditure on previous special schemes.

2. The calculations have been made using Treasury GDP deflators: 3.25 per cent. for 1994–95 to 1995–96 and 2.5 per cent. for 1995–96 to 1996–97.

Jobcentres

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list (a) the number and (b) the location of jobcentres which are currently operational in Wales. [17735]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service

Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones, dated 28 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number and location of Jobcentres in Wales.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans her Department has to establish further jobcentres in Wales in areas of high unemployment. [17720]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Services Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones, dated 28 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about what plans there are to establish further Jobcentres in Wales in areas of high unemployment.

The Employment Service (ES) is, through its integration programme, creating a national network of around 1100 new style Jobcentres which will bring Jobcentres and Benefit Offices together under one roof to provide a one stop employment service to help people back to work.

The new ES Jobcentres provide an improved service to clients, giving them easier access to the full range of services.

The integration programme in Wales has been completed providing 102 one stop Jobcentres to help unemployed people back into employment.

There are no plans at present to increase the number of Jobcentres in Wales. However, the provision and location of Jobcentre services are subject to regular review.

I hope this is helpful.

Part Course Fees Reimbursement Scheme

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funding changes are planned for the European Union part course fees reimbursement scheme administered by the British Council; what are the reasons for such changes; and what is the current level of funding for the European Union part course fees reimbursement scheme administered by the British Council. [17665]

Mr. Forth: The EC part course fees reimbursement scheme is a voluntary initiative by the UK Government which we have decided to discontinue. At a time of public expenditure constraint and many competing claims for funding, we are concerned to concentrate resources on our prime objectives, including participation in higher education by British students. The estimate of expenditure on the scheme in the current financial year is £1.389 million, including administration costs. The financial year 1996–97 will be the final full year of the scheme.

School Buildings

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will provide a comparative table of quantities, measurements, ratios or other mathematical requirements contained in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 as amended by subsequent regulations now extant together with those relating to the same features as set out in the draft regulations laid on 22 February, showing in each case the changes in figures and percentages, and for each case where figures do not occur in both parts the reasons for their omission or inclusion. [17812]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Both sets of regulations are available in the Library. Where figures which appear in one set of regulations are omitted in the other, the reasons are explained in the documents which went out for public consultation on 14 August 1995, which are also available in the Library.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many and which consultees favoured the reduction or elimination of quantifiable standards in the draft school building regulations which she laid before the House on 22 February. [17815]

Mrs. Gillan [holding answer 27 February 1996]: The listed consultees favoured the reduction or elimination of one or more quantifiable standards in the draft version of the Education (School Premises) Regulations which went out to consultation in August 1995.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will itemise expenditure on furniture for (a) jobcentres, (b) unemployment benefit offices and (c) departmental offices between 1991–92 and 1995–96. [15885]

Mr. Robin Squire: We are not able to disaggregate the costs between jobcentres and unemployment benefit offices. However, the following list is a breakdown of the available information on furniture expenditure for the Department for Education and Employment.

Total expenditure on furniture

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on proposals to use the private finance initiative in the activities of new providers for funded early years' education; and if she will make a statement on the role to be played in administering education by sources of the private finance initiative. [17872]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend expects projects under the private finance initiative to make an increasing contribution to the capital needs of the education sector, including the provision of early years' education. The Government's voucher scheme for nursery education creates an identifiable source of revenue which should prove attractive to the private sector. Phase 1 of the voucher scheme will highlight opportunities to potential providers.

PFI gives the public sector the opportunity to benefit from the application of private sector expertise and resources in developing innovative solutions for capital projects and services, thereby ensuring improved management of public projects and best value for money for public resources.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each of the education authority areas participating in her voucher scheme for early years education (a) the number qualified nursery school teachers in post, (b) the number of qualified nursery school assistants or nurses in post and (c) the number of persons holding qualifications of the Pre-school Learning Alliance. [17868]

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information is shown in the following table:

Full-time equivalent numbers of teachers and nursery assistants employed in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools: January 1995.

	Teachers		Nursery Assistants
LEA	Total	of which qualified	Total	of which qualified
Kensington and Chelsea	39	39	44	30
Wandsworth	72	68	85	77
Westminster	41	39	45	36
Norfolk	29	20	26	26

Qualified nursery assistants are those holding the NNEB Certificate (or equivalent) not employed as qualified teachers.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list (a) the estimated number of five-year-olds eligible, (b) the number of places already available through existing providers, by category, (c) the additional number of places expected from existing or new providers by category and (d) the deficit or surplus of places at the latest convenient date, for each of the local education authority areas participating in phase I of the early age voucher scheme. [17870]

Mr. Robin Squire: Children aged five will hold nursery education vouchers only where they become five in the term before compulsory school age. Data on these children are not held separately.

Lay Inspectors

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many lay inspectors who have received a distant learning package and no training have undertaken inspections. [17878]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

WALES

Official Engagements

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many official engagements he carried out in Wales in 1995. [15760]

Mr. Hague: After my appointment in July, I carried out over 100 official engagements in Wales in 1995.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet (a) the Confederation of British Industry and (b) the Trades Union Congress to discuss manufacturing industry; and if he will make a statement. [16208]

Mr. Hague: I met the CBI (Wales) on 4 December 1995 and the Wales TUC on 17 October. A range of issues were discussed, including some with relevance to manufacturing industry.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [16026]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The Curriculum and Assessment Authority for Wales, the Arts Council of Wales, the Cardiff Bay development corporation, the Countryside Council for Wales, the Development Board for Rural Wales, Housing for Wales, the Land Authority for Wales, the Residuary Body for Wales, the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Wales, the Sports Council for Wales, the Wales tourist board, the Welsh Language Board, and the agricultural wages committees are all open to the scrutiny of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

(b) The Audit Commissioner is the external auditor of the Residuary Body for Wales.

(c) The Comptroller and Auditor General is the external auditor of all Welsh executive NDPBs except the RB, Wales Youth Agency, HfW, and CBDC, to whose books and papers he nevertheless has access (a) under the National Audit Act 1983 for the purpose of carrying out examinations on value for money, and (b) by agreement, for the purpose of examining questions of regularity and propriety.

(d) All are encouraged to adopt procedures under the code of access to government information.

(e) All identify, publish and report against key performance measures in their annual reports other than the Higher and Further Education Funding Councils for Wales which give details in their corporate plans which are also published.

(f) All are subject to the provisions of the citizen's charter.

Overseas Companies (Employment)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by companies from (a) Japan, (b) the European Union and (c) the United States of America in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [16508]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of people currently employed by Japanese-owned manufacturing companies in Wales is 13,147; for European Union manufacturing companies, the figure is 19,487; and, for United States-owned manufacturing companies, the figure is 30,439. Wales has an excellent inward investment record which complements the part played by indigenous companies in the economic well-being of the country.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by overseas-owned manufacturing companies in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [16509]

Mr. Jones: Some 70,670 people are employed by overseas-owned manufacturing companies in Wales. These are valuable jobs provided by some of the biggest companies in the world. Their contribution to the Welsh economy is enormous and I am keen to see that contribution increased even further.

RAF Valley

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department is giving to maintain training for employees at RAF Valley. [16628]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In the light of decisions relating to the maintenance work at RAF Valley, the Welsh Office is prepared to help the North West Wales training and enterprise council with the cost of training local people to take up employment opportunities that might arise. An additional £75,000 has already been allocated to the council as a contribution towards the cost of taking forward the development of training programmes.

South-East Wales Ambulance Trust

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what severance package was agreed by South-East Wales ambulance trust for (a) its ex-chairman and (b) its ex-chief executive; and if these packages were submitted to the Welsh Office for approval. [16334]

Mr. Richards: The ex-chairman and ex-chief executive resigned voluntarily. The chairman did not receive a financial settlement. Any financial settlement agreed following the resignation of the chief executive is a matter for the trust and the individual concerned. The Department was consulted on the terms agreed between the trust and the ex-chief executive. The details are confidential but open to audit.

Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what funding the Welsh Office provides for each Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation office in Wales; and who is the accounting officer for the foundation. [16335]

Mr. Richards: Funding provided by the Welsh Office enables the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation to maintain an office in Swansea. Details of the payments made to date were given in my answer of 22 January to the hon. Member for Islwyn, (Mr. Touhig), at column 97.

The accounting officer for the foundation is its director, Mr. Andrew Turner.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17301]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

European Currency

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his oral answer on 19 February, Official Report, column 4, when he expects to assess the particular interests of Wales in respect of the introduction of a single European currency. [16968]

Mr. Hague: The United Kingdom will agree to take part in a single currency only if it is in our interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time. A full assessment of the benefits and disadvantages will be carried out nearer the time, before the decision is made.

Labour Statistics

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers of people in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment in Wales in (i) April 1979 and (ii) April 1995. [17356]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the numbers in full-time and part-time employment in Wales is not available for April 1979. However, information from the 1978 census of employment on full-time and part-time employees—excluding the self-employed—is published in appendix iv of the 1986 edition of "Welsh Economic Trends". The number of full-time and part-time employees in 1995, based on the Central Statistical Office's quarterly employment estimates is published in table 1.5 of the February 1996 edition of "Labour Market Trends". Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Weekly Earnings

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are average weekly earnings (a) overall and (b) in manufacturing. [17360]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees in Wales, at April 1995, were £301.3 overall and £317.2 in manufacturing, based on information from the new earnings survey.

Patients Charter

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the cost to public funds of the latest publication of the patients charter. [17585]

Mr. Hague: The cost of publishing the 1996 edition of the patients charter was £32,370—equivalent to about 13p per copy.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the guarantees contained in the new patients charter for Wales booklet, if he will specify the circumstances in which exceptions to the six months maximum waiting time will not be regarded as breaches of the patients charter. [17586]

Mr. Hague: The six month target for a first out-patient appointment is a standard and not a guarantee. It forms part of a total waiting time guarantee covering the period between GP referral to hospital and admission for treatment. The circumstances under which a waiting time in excess of the guarantees would not count as a breach are described in "Total Waiting Times; Operational Guidance", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Medical Priority Dispatch Systems

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the Welsh ambulance trusts concerning the introduction of medical priority dispatch systems. [17589]

Mr. Hague: None. The possible use of medical priority despatch systems is being examined alongside the current review of ambulance performance standards.

Treatment Centres

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are conditions for acceptance for treatment at the treatment centres for cataracts, orthopaedics and general surgery; and at the latest available date how many patients in each health authority area are deemed as qualifying under those conditions. [17584]

Mr. Hague: The key requirement for referral to the three treatment centres are that the patient has been assessed as in need of the operation by his local consultant, has no clinical contra-indication and, for cataract procedures and hip or knee replacements, has been on an in-patient waiting list for a minimum of four months.

The number of patients estimated by health authorities as eligible under the waiting time criterion for each treatment centre procedure, as at 30 June 1995, is as follows:

District health authority	Cataracts	Hernias/varicose veins	Hips[1]	Knees[1]
North Wales	584	606	179	245
Dyfed Powys	381	254	327	139
Gwent	1,033	546	219	187
Bro Taf	330	635	79	69
Morgannwg	677	467	125	89
Wales	3,005	2,508	929	729

[1] Hips and knee replacement figures include those for joint revisions.

Geriatric Long-Stay Beds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients occupied geriatric long-stay beds in NHS hospitals in (a) 1971, (b) 1976, (c) 1981, (d) 1986 and (e) 1991 and in each of the last three years. [17588]

Mr. Hague: Information is collected centrally on the basis of the number of in-patient cases treated in the specialty of geriatric medicine and, therefore, no split between long-stay and acute patients is available. The number of in-patient cases is given in the following table.

Number of in-patient cases treated in the specialty of geriatric medicine

	Number
1971	11,153
1976	17,840
1981	23,776
1986–87	37,634
1991–92	47,219
1992–93	50,255
1993–94	51,666
1994–95	48,577

Pembrokeshire Cliffs

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to complete the designation of the Pembrokeshire cliffs candidate special protection area. [17862]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Castlemartin coast in Pembrokeshire was classified as a special protection area under the wild birds directive on 12 January 1996. Consultation has taken place on the proposed Ramsey and St. David's coast SPA and responses are being considered. The Limestone sea cliffs side in south-west Wales was submitted to the European Commission in June 1995 for consideration as a candidate special area of conservation under the habitats directive. The Pembrokeshire islands candidate SSC has yet to be submitted to the Commission. A decision will be taken when all the points arising from last year's public consultation have been fully considered.

Sea Empress

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring of the seabird population he is proposing as a result of the Sea Empress oil spill. [17863]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Countryside Council for Wales is conducting a study of the entire marine environment to monitor the effects of the Sea Empress oil spill. Monitoring of seabird populations is an important element of the study which will involve liaison with all of the interested agencies in the area. This will form part of a comprehensive environmental monitoring and assessment programme for which my right hon. Friend has provided £250,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cattle (Tuberculosis)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what levels of compensation were paid to farmers with cattle affected with TB in each of the last five years; and what would have been paid if the level of compensation was set at (a) 100 per cent. and (b) 120 per cent. [16241]

Mrs. Browning: The total of compensation paid to farmers in England with cattle affected by TB is as follows:

Year	Compensation £
1990–91	371,173
1991–92	557,987
1992–93	1,030,340
1993–94	1,928,000
1994–95	1,329,936

For 1994-95 it is estimated that compensation would have increased by (a) £826,280 and (b) £1,257,523 respectively if the level had been at (a) 100 per cent. and (b) 120 per cent. of the value of the animals. Comparable figures cannot be established, except at disproportionate cost, for earlier years.

Food Content

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the research into food products being conducted by York university, with particular reference to fruit pastilles. [16318]

Mrs. Browning: The research project is part of the LINK food processing sciences research programme. LINK projects are jointly funded by industry and Government. The academic contribution to this project is provided by York university and the Cranfield institute of technology with a consortium of food companies providing the industrial contribution. Half of the resources for the project are provided by the industrial consortium with the remainder coming from Government. The project is directed at developing a fundamental understanding of the behaviour of mixtures of biopolymers, such as protein and starch. Fruit pastilles are a convenient and simple model system for use in part of the study.

British Beef (Ban)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had during the last month with the German Government as to the existing ban on the import of British beef; and if he will make a statement. [16322]

Mrs. Browning: I deeply regret the action taken by some German länder in banning the import of British beef. This clearly breaches Germany's EC obligations and is an unacceptable restriction on British trade.

My right hon. Friend wrote to the German Agriculture and Health Ministers earlier this month to protest against the bans and to seek an assurance that urgent action is being taken to ensure compliance by the länder with the Community rules on trade in beef. My right hon. Friend also wrote to Commissioner Fischler about this matter and discussed it with him on 20 February. The Commission has started the process necessary to commence infringement proceedings against Germany.

Abattoir Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on capacity in the abattoir industry; what plans he has to reduce that capacity; and by what means and under what authority he intends to take forward such plans. [16655]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 22 February 1996]: The Meat and Livestock Commission estimates that basic slaughtering capacity in Great Britain is already some 45 per cent. in excess of our current slaughter requirements and that the situation is getting worse. It is generally recognised that this has been the major cause of serious under-investment, low profitability and poor competitiveness over the last decade.

The Government have no plans to reduce abattoir capacity and believe that it is for the meat and livestock industry to determine for itself what are the needs of the market-place and how they should best be met. The Agriculture Act 1967 gives the MLC the power to prepare a development scheme to deal with excess capacity in the industry. The MLC is currently consulting the meat and livestock industry on such a scheme. My right hon. Friend is required by the Act to consider any development scheme put to him by the MLC, together with objections to it, before deciding whether to put it to Parliament for approval.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16891]

Mr. Boswell: A number of officials in the Department have declared their outside interests in accordance with departmental requirements. As with all employment matters, individuals' details are a confidential matter between them and their employer.

The departmental requirements are that staff must seek approval before becoming associated with any kind of private business interest which is related to the work of the Department, including holding shares which represent more than 10 per cent. of the issued share capital in any agricultural, food or fishery businesses or in any other businesses directly related to the area in which they work.

A central record of declarations is kept in accordance with the Department's records management procedures.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) confirmed and (b) unconfirmed cases of BSE there were in each week in October, November and December 1995. [16791]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The number of suspected BSE cases placed under restriction and subsequently confirmed or not confirmed as having BSE in the last 13 weeks of 1995 are as follows:

Date (week ending)	Restricted	BSE confirmed	Not BSE
6 October 1995	280	204	46
13 October 1995	284	212	40
20 October 1995	263	184	54
27 October 1995	280	197	45
03 November 1995	341	237	59
10 November 1995	347	250	46
17 November 1995	390	251	60
24 November 1995	380	220	70
01 December 1995	330	213	45
08 December 1995	359	207	66
15 December 1995	313	164	56
22 December 1995	382	149	65
29 December 1995	179	68	22

The remaining balance consists of animals:

(i) which have not been slaughtered and where restrictions have been lifted, that is, no longer BSE suspects;

(ii) which are still under restriction as BSE suspects but which have not yet been slaughtered; and

(iii) which have been slaughtered but for which the results of histopathological examination to confirm BSE are still pending.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total expenditure by the Forestry Commission on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 broken down by category. [16778]

Mr. Boswell: The Forestry Commission spent some £29,000 on grants to woodland owners and £130,000 on managing its own woodlands.

Cereal Prices

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average price of (a) wheat, (b) barley and (c) oats per ton in (i) the year preceding the introduction of set-aside and (ii) in each year since. [17150]

Mr. Baldry: The cereals marketing year 1 July 1992 to 30 June 1993 saw the marketing of the last—i.e. 1992—harvest prior to the introduction of compulsory set-aside. The average realised price for wheat, barley and oats produced in the UK and marketed during 1992–93 and subsequent years has been as follows:

Year[1]	Average realised price (£ per tonne)
	Wheat	Barley	Oats
1992–93	129	126	128
1993–94	107	110	117
1994–95	113	116	98

[1] July to June.

Source:
MAFF.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what forecasts his Department (a) made and (b) evaluated of the prices for (i) barley, (ii) oats and (iii) wheat following the introduction of set-aside. [17151]

Mr. Baldry: The introduction of compulsory set-aside was linked to cuts in EU cereal support prices of around 35 per cent.—in ecu terms—over the three-year period 1993–94 to 1995–96. These cuts were expected to result in a broadly comparable fall in market prices. Average prices did indeed fall significantly between 1992–93 and 1993–94 but various external factors, including a rise in world market prices for cereals, meant that this initial fall was not sustained.

Egg and Poultry Producers

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many egg and poultry producers there (a) were in 1986 and (b) are currently. [17178]

Mr. Baldry: Estimates for England from the June 1987 agricultural and Horticultural census—the earliest date for which figures are readily available—and the June 1995 agricultural and horticultural census are shown in the table.

	Holding size groups (number of birds)
	1:<10,000	10,000: <100,000	100,000 and over	Total
1987
Number of Producers of eggs and poultry of which:	34,776	1,545	234	36,555
only producing hen eggs for eating[1]	14,986	568	54	15,608
only producing other poultry[2]	6,560	827	163	7,550
producing both eggs and poultry[3]	13,230	150	17	13,397
1985
Number of Producers of eggs and poultry of which:	25,165	1,229	239	26,633
only producing hen eggs for eating[1]	8,559	363	57	8,979
only producing other poultry[2]	5,986	788	172	6,946

	Holding size groups (number of birds)
	1:<10,000	10,000: <100,000	100,000 and over	Total
producing both eggs and poultry[3]	10,620	78	10	10,708

All figures exclude Turkeys.
[1] only producing hens eggs for eating covers those holdings returning under the census questions headed 'Hens and pullets kept mainly for producing eggs', but no other poultry questions.
[2] only producing other poultry covers those holdings returning under the census poultry questions other than those headed 'Hens and pullets kept mainly for producing eggs for eating'.
[3] producing both eggs and poultry covers those holdings returning under the census questions headed 'Hens and pullets kept mainly for producing eggs for eating' while also returning any other poultry questions.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: to ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 26 February; and if he will make a statement. [18475]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Council had a first discussion on the 1996 farm price proposals. The United Kingdom regretted that the Commission had not taken this opportunity to propose a move towards the more market orientated CAP which its recent report had recognised was inevitable for the longer term. In particular, the UK regretted the failure to address the over-compensation of the arable sector which resulted from high Community and world market prices for cereals and unchanged area payments.

The Council also discussed Commission proposals on the use of hormones and so-called beta agonists in livestock farming. Most member states remain opposed to any use of hormones and, with few limited exceptions, beta agonists. The UK stressed the desirability of avoiding the adoption of a policy which would run serious risks of adverse judgments in the World Trade Organisation. However, this approach was supported only by Spain and the Netherlands. The President announced that he expected to take final decisions at the next meeting in March.

The Commissioner outlined his proposals to improve the welfare of calves used for veal production. The UK welcomed the proposal but criticised the proposed 12-year transitional period as being much too long.

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to strengthen his Department's regional organisation following the delays experienced in 1995 in payments under the arable area payments scheme. [18476]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With the aim of avoiding any such delays on this or other schemes, and despite a general reduction in the Ministry's running costs budget of over 5 per cent., the regional organisation, which makes such payments, will benefit from an increased level of provision for the financial year 1996–97 compared with the current. Various improvement in IT and in management procedures are also in train.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17314]

Mr. Newton [holding answer 126 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has no contracts with EDS Scicon.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make available to the members of the Intelligence and Security Services Committee Sir Richard Scott's further recommendation in section K7.7 which has been submitted to the Government but not made publicly available. [16950]

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take in the light of Sir Richard Scott's recommendation in section K8.13 to amend paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers"; and if he will make a statement. [16948]

Mr. Freeman: The Government are considering what further measures may need to be taken in the light of this and other findings of the Scott report and my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will consider in due course whether such measures require amendments to "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G13.113 and 115 that Ministers should inform the court if they have views on disclosure; and if he will make a statement; [17369]

(2) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusions in section G18.107 that it is a waste of public time and money to place the issue of disclosure in respect of trivial documents before the trial judge; and if he will make a statement. [17367]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Following the House of Lords judgment in ex parte Wiley—1994—Ministers can make voluntary disclosure of documents if they conclude that this is in the overall public interest.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.66 that the Attorney-General's advice was without any sound legal foundation; and if he will make a statement. [17371]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Government are entirely satisfied that the Attorney-General's advice was soundly based in law. A copy of the Government's response to the Scott report on public interest immunity is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the conclusions he reached in page 114 of the oral evidence he gave to Sir Richard Scott on 28 February 1994 relating to disclosure of documents; and what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusions set out in section G of his report relating to this matter. [17366]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Attorney-General and prosecuting counsel in the Matrix Churchill case had advised that it was for the trial judge to decide on disclosure of the documents covered by my public interest immunity certificate. The trial judge, Judge Smedley, subsequently ordered disclosure as I had expected him to.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in G13.106 that the brief to Mr. Moses and the Attorney-General's submissions to Judge Smedley were inconsistent with his views as outlined in oral evidence given on 28 February 1994; and if he will make a statement. [17370]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I am satisfied that Judge Smedley dealt with the PII certificate which I signed in precisely the way in which the Attorney-General had advised me he would. Judge Smedley looked at the documents covered by my PII certificate and decided which should be disclosed.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.104 that the class claims made in the Matrix-Churchill trial; and if he will make a statement. [17368]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The PII class claims in the Matrix Churchill trial were held by the trial judge to have been properly made. The application of PII class claims in criminal cases has since been confirmed by the higher courts.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18-60 that the Government are entitled to authorise the disclosure of their confidential or secret documents; and if he will make a statement. [17372]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Following the House of Lords judgment in ex parte Wiley—1994—Ministers can make voluntary disclosure of documents if they conclude that this is in the overall public interest. It has always been for Ministers to decide whether disclosure for purposes other than legal proceedings is in the public interest.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17315]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade, on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589-604.

SCOTLAND

Local Government Finance

15. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next intends to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government finance. [15799]

25. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government funding. [15809]

Mr. Kynoch: I will be meeting COSLA on 28 June.

29. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss Scottish local government; and if he will make a statement. [15814]

Mr. Kynoch: On 26 January. At the meeting, the convention representatives argued that the 1996–97 local government finance settlement was inadequate and have since put a figure of £395 million on the alleged shortfall in funding. The settlement already provides for an increase of £148 million or 2.9 per cent. in the level of aggregate external finance which is £26.5 million more than the formula consequences of the English settlement and the convention were asked to say which other Scottish expenditure programmes should be further reduced in order to increase the level of the local government settlement, but declined to express any view on this.

Fire Services

16. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums were made available in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97 to local authorities for fire services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [15800]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Grant-aided expenditure for the fire service in Scotland was set at £134.4 million in 1995–96 and has been set at £147.4 million for 1996–97—an increase of nearly 10 per cent. It is up to local authorities to decide whether to spend at, below or above GAE on any particular service.

Scottish Economy

17. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet with representatives of Scottish Enterprise to discuss trends in the Scottish economy; and if he will make a statement. [15801]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Ministers meet Scottish Enterprise regularly to discuss a range of issues.

30. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the prospects for the Scottish economy. [15815]

Mr. Kynoch: The prospects for the Scottish economy remain excellent. The latest CBI survey reports that Scottish manufacturers are more optimistic about business conditions, on average, than elsewhere in the UK. Recent independent forecasts of the Scottish economy predict high levels of GDP growth both this year and next. This is very encouraging.

City of Glasgow Council

18. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will meet the new City of Glasgow council to discuss its budget. [15802]

31. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet the City of Glasgow council to discuss the city's finances. [15816]

35. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the leaders of the City of Glasgow and South Lanarkshire unitary councils to discuss the financial positions of those councils. [15820]

Mr. Kynoch: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe), for Glasgow, Central (Mr. Watson) and for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Hughes).

Tourism

19. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning tourism in Scotland. [15803]

Mr. Kynoch: I believe that 1995 will prove to have been a very successful year for Scottish tourism, which is a major contributor to the Scottish economy.

Policing

20. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet Scotland's chief constables; and what aspects of policing he expects to discuss. [15804]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend met chief constables on 20 January and also attended the Prime Minister's reception at No. 10 in honour of the police on 7 February.

Teachers' Pay Settlement

22. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the teachers' pay settlement and projected increases in retail prices index on the provision of education services by (a) Edinburgh city and (b) Scottish councils in 1996–97. [15806]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The teachers pay settlement in Scotland is a matter for the Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee and negotiations have not yet started.

Afforestation

23. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Forestry Commission's plans for afforestation in the next year. [15807]

Mr. Kynoch: As detailed in the Government's expenditure plans published last year, the Forestry Commission has provision to grant aid and carry out 22,250 hectares of new planting and 16,000 hectares of restocking in 1996–97.

Health Boards

24. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the chairmen of Scottish health boards to discuss finance. [15808]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall next be meeting health board chairmen on 1 March, when I expect to discuss a range of NHS issues.

Drugs

26. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent consultations he has had with ministerial colleagues about implementation of "Drugs in Scotland: Meeting the Challenge"; and if he will make a statement. [15811]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend and I have regular contacts with ministerial colleagues about various aspects of drug misuse in Scotland, including the implementation of the valuable recommendations in that report where we have made very significant progress. Our new all-party drugs campaign in Scotland will build on, and complement, the success we have already achieved in the implementation of the report.

Smoking

27. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make legal aid available to those allegedly suffering from smoking-related illnesses who are taking legal action against tobacco companies. [15812]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The granting of civil legal aid is a matter for the Scottish Legal Aid Board.

Single-tier Authorities

28. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the method of calculation of the financial settlement to the new single-tier authorities. [15813]

Mr. Kynoch: We have received a number of representations regarding the distribution of the 1996–97 settlement. The distribution is on the basis agreed by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Scottish Parliament

32. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the effect of a Scottish Parliament on economic growth and job creation. [15817]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is widely accepted by the business community throughout Scotland that a Scottish Parliament with tax-raising powers would have a detrimental effect on economic growth and job creation.

Council of Ministers

33. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that Scottish Office Ministers regularly attend meetings of the EC Council of Ministers. [15818]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scottish Office Ministers attend Council meetings as part of the UK delegation as and when matters relevant to my responsibilities are discussed. I also attend Cabinet Committee meetings to discuss UK policy on European Union issues. This enables me to ensure that any specific Scottish points are considered within the context of overall UK policy and to decide which Council meetings require ministerial attendance.

Electoral Roll

34. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average number on the electoral roll of each Scottish parliamentary constituency. [15819]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Based on the 1995 electoral register, the number is 55,022.

University of the Highlands and Islands

36. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his statement at the Scottish Grand Committee of 5 February in Inverness, Official Report, Scottish Grand Committee, column 28, what further discussions he has held into the possibility of the establishment of a university of the highlands and islands; and if he will make a statement. [15821]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend plans to meet the chairman of Highlands and Islands Enterprise and Sir Graham Hill, an academic adviser to the university of highlands and islands project, to discuss this and other matters. Officials have met with the director of the university of the highlands and islands project and representatives of colleges in the highlands and islands for a preliminary discussion.

Crime

37. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many crimes were committed (a) in 1979 and (b) in the last year for which figures are available. [15822]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of crimes recorded by the police in Scotland was 346,680 in 1979 and 527,064 in 1994.

Failing Schools

38. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what policies he is pursuing in respect of failing schools in Scotland. [15823]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Examples of the policies we are following to raise standards and improve quality include:

inspection by HM inspectors of schools with appropriate and systematic follow-up;

the requirement on all schools to draw up school development plans; and the publication of extensive information for parents on schools' performance.

Higher Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students are currently in higher education and at what cost; what was the number in 1979 and at what cost in 1995–96 prices; and if he will make a statement. [15797]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: There are nearly twice as many students in higher education since we took office and funding provided by the Government has gone up by £160 million to £400 million.

Prisons

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration is being given to allowing prison staff to bid for the management contract to run any future private finance initiative prison. [15805]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is an option which my right hon. Friend has not ruled out.

Glenochil Prison Riot Trial

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take in response to statements made by the advocate depute at the Glenochil prison riot trial in respect of the quality of evidence given by prison officers. [15722]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. John McFall, dated 28 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the comments made by the Advocate Depute at the Glenochil Prison riot trial.

We are considering jointly with the Crown Office what lessons might be learned from this particular trial. Within the SPS, we are also reviewing the guidance given to prison staff on recording details of incidents and on preparing to be a witness in court.

Grants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what tests are applied to business plans submitted to him or his agencies by private companies or others requesting grants or other public money to establish whether such support represents value for money. [16271]

Mr. Kynoch: The appraisal process for any application for grant or other public funds will depend on the particular programme or scheme under which such an application is made. The tests applied will vary according to the purpose of the programme or scheme concerned, but value for money will normally be a key criterion.

Prison Transfers

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the policy of the Prison Service in relation to applications for prison transfers to prisons in the country of origin of the applicant; [16234]

(2) if he will approve outstanding prison transfer applications for Irish prisoners wishing to return to prisons in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) the Republic of Ireland; [16235]

(3) how many applications for prison transfers from prisons in Scotland to (a) Northern Ireland, (b) the Republic of Ireland and (c) elsewhere, are currently under consideration; and in each category how many applications have been (i) approved and (ii) denied in each of the past 10 years. [16236]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 February 1996]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 28 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your 3 questions about the transfer of prisoners.

There is statutory provision for the transfer of prisoners from one United Kingdom jurisdiction to another in certain circumstances, should the individual prisoner request it. The factors taken into account include the prisoner's domestic circumstances, place of domicile prior to conviction and length of sentence left to serve. Both jurisdictions must agree to the transfer. Revised criteria for inter-United Kingdom transfers were announced in the Official Report dated 23 November 1992, Columns 476–477. For prisoners seeking repatriation, applications are considered under the provisions of the Council of Europe Convention on the Transfer of Sentenced Prisoners.

The information on the number of prisoners who applied for transfer to Northern Ireland and elsewhere in the past 10 years is as follows:

	Northern Ireland		Elsewhere
	Agreed	Refused	Agreed	Refused
1985	2	2	not available	not available
1986	1	—	not available	not available
1987	1	3	not available	not available
1988	2	1	51	not available
1989	—	1	56	not available
1990	2	2	44	not available
1991	1	1	27	not available
1992	3	2	62	50
1993	5	—	51	73
1994	—	1	47	22
1995	2	1	31	16

At 23 February there were 2 outstanding applications for Northern Ireland, none for the Republic of Ireland and 29 for elsewhere. They will be determined on their individual merits.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate will meet Libyan lawyers concerned with the destruction of Pan American flight 103 over Lockerbie. [16061]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has no plans to do so.

Water Authorities

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what have been the remuneration levels which can be claimed by the members of the boards of each of the East, West and North of Scotland water authorities; and how much time the members of the boards of these organisations are expected to spend on water authority duties in respect of these levels of remuneration. [17576]

Mr. Kynoch: The chairmen of the North and West of Scotland water authorities are paid £40,000 per annum and expected to devote approximately two and a half days per week; the chairman of the East of Scotland water authority is paid £24,000 per annum and expected to devote approximately one and a half days per week. The members of each of the three water authorities are paid £6,000 per annum for a minimum of two to three days per month, and the chief executives £80,000 per annum for full-time employment.

Additionally, the chief executives are eligible to receive a performance-related bonus which is limited to a maximum of 10 per cent. of salary in the first year rising to a maximum of 20 per cent. in subsequent years.

Monofilament Nets

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what increase in fishing efforts he estimates will take place after the lifting of the ban on the use of large mesh monofilament nets by Scottish boats. [17606]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: No substantial increase in effort is anticipated.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for which target species he expects Scottish boats to set large mesh monofilament nets when their use becomes legal; and in what ways this will be monitored. [17608]

Mr. Robertson: Fishermen are expected to target large flat fish, such as brill, turbot and various rays, as well as anglerfish, if Parliament approves the use of these nets in Scottish waters. Catches will be monitored in the same way as catches made with other static net gear.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what monitoring will take place in respect of the impact of large mesh monofilament nets on marine birds species when the ban on their use by Scottish boats is lifted. [17610]

Mr. Robertson: The nets, which fishermen are expected to use as bottom set tangle nets, are unlikely to pose a threat to these species. Their operation will be kept under review nonetheless.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) in what circumstances he will close areas to monofilament nets; [17612]

(2) if he will bring forward measures to restrict the use of large mesh monofilament nets by Scottish boats, in areas where they could cause problems of entanglement of wildlife before lifting the ban on their use. [17607]

Mr. Robertson: Once approved by Parliament, fishermen are expected to operate these nets as bottom set tangle nets which pose no additional threat to wildlife. The selective use of such nets by area is not proposed. Their operation will be kept under review nonetheless.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what efforts he will be making to ensure that bycatch of marine wildlife in fishing gear is (a) prevented or (b) minimised; [17605]

(2) if he will introduce a monitoring scheme to assess the impact upon marine wildlife when the ban on the use of large mesh monofilament nets by Scottish boats is lifted. [17611]

Mr. Robertson: The Government apply arrangements under the agreement on conservation of small cetaceans of the Baltic and North seas and have no plans to introduce additional measures.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the voluntary reporting scheme of marine mammal bycatch to assess the impact of large mesh monofilament nets. [17609]

Mr. Robertson: The Government are satisfied that large mesh monofilament nets, if approved by Parliament for use in Scottish waters, pose no greater threat than similar sized nets made from other synthetic materials. The effectiveness of the scheme is kept under review and additional scientific research has been commissioned to aid that process.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the consultation he has conducted regarding the use of large mesh monofilament nets. [17613]

Mr. Robertson: I am satisfied that all those with a direct interest in this matter were consulted fully.

Student Awards Agency

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the annual report and accounts of the Student Awards Agency for Scotland for 1994–95 and the agency's key targets for 1995–96. [18325]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have today arranged for copies of the agency's annual report and accounts to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

I have set the following key performance targets for the Student Awards Agency for Scotland for 1995–96:

Service

To process 75 per cent. of applications within 28 days of receipt.

To respond to 95 per cent. of general correspondence within 15 working days of receipt.

To respond to all Chief Executive and Ministerial correspondence within 15 working days of receipt.

To answer all complaints within 14 calendar days of receipt.

Agency Management

Average unit cost to process each successful application—(based on current costs) target £35.

Efficiency gains—3.79 per cent.

The chief executive will be directly responsible to me for ensuring that these targets are achieved and full details will be published in the agency's annual report and accounts.

Beaufort's Dyke

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce details of further survey work at Beaufort's dyke. [18326]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Government have arranged for the marine laboratory, Aberdeen to undertake further surveys of Beaufort's dyke and the surrounding area. The principal objective of this work, which will be undertaken in May and July, will be to map the densities and distribution of any dumped munitions, particularly those located outwith the Beaufort's dyke explosives disposal site.

The survey work will encompass:

an area to the north, including the territory to be covered by the proposed electricity interconnector;

the area to the east between the deep trench and the Scottish coastline; and an area to the south and east up to and including the natural gas pipeline between Scotland and the Republic of Ireland.

The final limits of the investigation will be determined by the distribution and densities of dumped munitions. A map of the areas to be covered by the survey has been placed in the House Library.

The MLA investigations will utilise its research vessel's hull-mounted transducer interfaced to RoxAnn©, high resolution side-scan sonar, towed sledge, ROV-mounted and drop frame—suspended from the survey vessel—underwater television systems, and a magnetometer, or pulse induction or resistivity system. A boomer system may also be used to investigate sub-surface sea bed sediments.

Sea bed sediment and fish and shellfish samples will again be collected, particularly from those areas which were not sampled earlier, to confirm whether dumped munitions have had an effect on the quality of the marine environment or commercially exploited species.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his plans for the proposed expansion of the assisted places scheme in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [18327]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The assisted places scheme has been an important element in the Government's policies to extend choice in Scottish education, and to raise quality and standards. It provides the opportunity for parents to choose the education which they think best suits the needs of their children, regardless of their financial circumstances. Since the scheme was introduced in 1981, it has helped over 11,000 children to attend independent schools in Scotland who would not otherwise have had the opportunity.

My right hon. Friend's announcement on 13 October 1995 of plans for a phased doubling of the present annual target of 3,000 assisted places in Scotland has received a very positive response from parents and schools. This clearly confirms the success of the scheme and the benefits to be derived from it. In line with our expansion plans, my right hon. Friend is making provision to increase the number of pupils who benefit in 1996–97 to around 3,500 and this will include for the first time pupils of primary school age. Fifty-three schools across Scotland will participate in the scheme. It is possible that one or more additional schools may become eligible to participate later in 1996–97. Some £12.48 million will be available for fee remission in the 1996–97 school session, almost 17 per cent. more than was made available for the 1995–96 session.

The increased resources being made available for the 1996–97 school session mark the first phase of expansion of the scheme, and will ensure its growing contribution to excellence and diversity in Scottish education. My right hon. Friend will also be drawing up proposals in consultation with the Scottish Council of Independent Schools and others for the future development and expansion of the scheme.

My right hon. Friend announced in December 1995 that assistance will now be extended to pupils undertaking primary education at participating secondary schools with integrated primary departments. The minimum age for assistance, previously 10 years of age, will therefore be lowered to five years of age from the start of the 1996–97 session.

My right hon. Friend proposes in due course to lay regulations before the House providing for progressive parental contributions for the 1996–97 school session for one pupil assisted under the assisted places scheme. As in previous years, we shall be seeking to ensure that about half of all pupils receiving an assisted place should receive full remission of their fees. Accordingly, parents earning less than £9,873 a year will not have to pay anything towards fees. The regulations will provide for the following contributions in relation to family income:

Part of relevant income to which the specified percentage applies	Parental contribution (percentage)
That part (if any) which exceeds £9,707 but does not exceed £10,555	9
That part (if any) which exceeds £10,555 but does not exceed £11,417	12
That part (if any) which exceeds £11,417 but does not exceed £13,127	15
That part (if any) which exceeds £13,127 but does not exceed £15,760	21
That part (if any) which exceeds £15,760 but does not exceed £19,194	24
That part (if any) which exceeds £19,194	33

The relevant income scale is open-ended, but the remission can, of course, be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fee.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency (DNA Testing)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of the DNA tests performed for the Child Support Agency have been (a) positive (b) negative. [14958]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 27 February 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about DNA testing under Child Support Agency arrangements.

The discounted DNA scheme was introduced in July 1995. This provided alleged absent parents with a means of resolving a paternity dispute without the need to go to court.

In the period July 1995 to 25 January 1996 the paternity of 500 children has been the subject of completed DNA tests. Positive results were obtained for 433 of the children (86.6%). The alleged absent parent tested was excluded from being the father in 67 instances. (13.4%).

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost of DNA tests available via the CSA: and in how many cases DNA testing has been used before a paternity case has been referred to court. [12807]

Mr. Mitchell [pursuant to his reply, 1 February 1996, c. 987–91]: I am advised that Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Child Support Agency, is writing again to clarify her reply of 1 February. I am arranging for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library with the additional information.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Malcolm Wicks, dated 27 February 1996:

I am writing to you pursuant to my letter of 1 February 1996. This was in response to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about DNA tests. I believe there is a need to clearly set out the make up of the 904 DNA tests I referred to.

Up to the end of November 1995 some 352 cases had been referred for discounted DNA testing. In addition 552 cases were subject to a DNA test as a result of Court direction.

A discounted DNA test comes about as a result of an alleged absent parent availing himself of the option to go for a DNA test either as a result of responding to a suggestion from the Agency or requesting a test himself. As before, I am not aware that any of these cases have been referred for Court action.

The only other means of a DNA test arising is as a result of Court direction. This would be after an initial Court hearing.

I hope this information is helpful.

Contributions Agency (Wales)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had with the Welsh Consumer Council and other voluntary bodies concerning the proposed reorganisation of the Contributions Agency's field operations in Wales and the closure of the dedicated caller area at Cardiff; and if he will make a statement. [17822]

Mr. Heald: The administration of the Contributions Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 28 February 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency.

I have been asked to reply to your enquiry regarding consultations on the proposed re-organisation of the Contributions Agency field operations in Wales and the closure of the caller area in Cardiff.

The Contributions Agency has embarked upon a process of consultation with all external customers. The Regional Manager for Wales and Severnside Region has written to all local businesses and organisations, providing information on the proposed changes and seeking comment. I understand that the Welsh Consumer Council were omitted from the initial consultation, however I am assured that this is being immediately rectified. Please accept my apologies for this oversight.

The proposed closure of the caller facility at Gabalfa, Cardiff is a feature of that consultation process, and a final decision will not be taken until the consultation process is completed.

I hope you find this response helpful, if you require anything further please let me know.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the money to be saved in a full year by moving (a) in total and (b) in each region reduced earnings allowance recipients on to retirement allowance. [10119]

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 19 January 1996]: The table gives the estimate of the savings from transferring most over pensionable age reduced earnings allowance recipients to retirement allowance in 1996–97 in line with the proposed change announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in November 1995. Recipients of REA who had retired before 10 April 1989 would not be affected by the proposed change.

1. Estimates are for the 1996–97 financial year and are at cash prices.
2. "—" denotes a saving of less than £0.5 million.
3. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £1 million, except the total savings which are rounded to the nearest £5 million. Estimates are not accurate to this degree.
4. Any additional income related benefit expenditure has been offset against the savings.

Access Committee

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish the results of the report of the working party that is reviewing the Access Committee's future; [13902]

(2) what are his plans for the continued funding of the Access Committee; [13903]

(3) if he will make a statement about the future of the Access Committee for England. [13901]

Mr. Burt: My colleagues and I in the Departments of Health and of the Environment are considering the working party's report which has only recently been completed. The members of the working party were drawn from this Department and the Departments of Health and of the Environment. We shall announce our decisions on the committee's future in due course. The report is an internal document and will not be published.

Agencies (Disciplinary Action)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many employees of (a) the Benefits Agency and (b) the Contributions Agency have faced dismissal or other disciplinary action for the improper use of confidential information since 1993; and what steps these agencies are taking to minimise the misuse of confidential information. [15755]

Mr. Burt: Two employees of the Benefits Agency and one from the Contributions Agency have been dismissed for the improper use of confidential information since 1993. Disciplinary action has been taken against a further five employees of the Benefits Agency. These figures do not include possible incidents of staff being disciplined, including dismissal, for the improper use of confidential information arising out of unauthorised access to the agencies' computer systems. The statistics for unauthorised access to computer systems do not include information about whether the unauthorised access resulted in the improper use of confidential information.

Access to computer systems is limited to the minimum possible to enable staff to carry out their duties and security check and audit trail functionality systems are in place to investigate suspected unauthorised access. In addition, information to staff through personnel codes, letters from the agencies' chief executives and a recent leaflet and poster campaign underline the importance of security of information and the seriousness with which unauthorised access to computer systems is viewed.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16886]

Mr. Burt: Under the rules set out in the civil service management code, staff must report any interest, whether business, financial, paid or unpaid, which might conflict with their work in the Department. They must also seek permission before undertaking any outside activity which may result in a conflict of interest. When a member of staff reports an interest or seeks permission to undertake and outside activity, a local record is kept. Any such details are treated as confidential. No central records are held and we have no plans to introduce a central register.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17317]

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Wales are in receipt of attendance allowance; and if he will list the figures for each (a) local authority and (b) health authority area. [17580]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Estimate of number of pensioners receiving attendance allowance in Wales at 30 November 1995

Health authority area	Number
Clwyd	12,100
Gwent	11,200
Gwynedd	5,300
Mid Glamorgan	16,500
Powys	3,200
South Glamorgan	9,500
West Glamorgan	14,700
Dyfed	10,000
Total	82,400

Notes:
1. Figures are provisional and subject to change.
2. Figures do not sum due to roundings.

DSS (Analytical Services Division) 5 per cent. data sample.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are in receipt of invalid care allowance in Wales at the latest available date as a result of their responsibility for caring for (a) spouses, (b) parents, (c) adult children with mental or physical handicap and (d) any combination of (a) (b) and (c). [17582]

Mr. Burt: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

War Pensions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has of the numbers in receipt of (a) war widow's pension and (b) war pension in Wales at the latest available date. [17583]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that as at 31 March 1995, the latest date for which information is readily available, there were 2,756 war widows and 16,271 war disablement pensioners receiving payment in Wales.

ENVIRONMENT

EU Funding, Merseyside

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much European regional development fund funding has been allocated to Merseyside since it acquired objective 1 status; what percentage has so far been spent; and if he will make a statement. [15545]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Merseyside objective 1 programme has an allocation of £380 million, at current exchange rates, to be committed over the period 1994 to 1999; £51 million—14 per cent. of total ERDF funding—has so far been offered to 147 approved projects. Many of the approved projects are large-scale capital schemes that have expenditure profiles spread over the life of the programme. The projects have so far received £14.5 million in grant payments, broadly in line with their expected rate of spend. This represents 28 per cent. of funding committed. A further £158 million—42 per cent. of total ERDF funding—of ERDF grant towards 142 projects with similar spend profiles is under active consideration by the secretariat. New applications for funding will be invited over the first half of this year on a rolling basis.

Household Waste Recycling, Greater Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage recycling of household waste in the Greater Manchester area. [17056]

Mr. Clappison: The Government's overall policy aim for achieving more sustainable waste management is to increase the proportion of waste managed by the options towards the top of the waste hierarchy, including waste minimisation and recycling. Specific measures to encourage recycling of household waste are set out in the White Paper "Making Waste Work: A strategy for sustainable waste management in England and Wales" which was published in December.

Provision of local recycling facilities is a matter for local authorities and the private and voluntary sectors. As an aid to this process, we have recently invited bids from local authorities for a further £10 million of supplementary credit approval resources for capital investment during 1996–97 in recycling projects. More generally, our initiative on producer responsibility for packaging waste will play a key role in developing local infrastructure and encouraging higher rates of recycling, together with other factors, such as the rising costs of waste disposal, including the proposed landfill tax, and improved markets for secondary raw materials.

Water Leakage Reduction Targets

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has undertaken with Ofwat on the establishment of published leakage reduction targets for water companies. [17044]

Mr. Clappison: Ofwat, the National Rivers Authority and my Department are continuing discussions with the water industry about plans to reduce leakage as part of the review of water resource arrangements announced by my right hon. Friend on 1 September.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current waiting time for planning appeals for each local authority. [17065]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested for each local authority is not available. The current average waiting time for all planning appeals in England is: (i) written representations—16 weeks; (ii) hearings—35 weeks; (iii) inquiries—40 weeks.

Out-of-town Retail Developments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times in each year since 1979 he has called in out-of-town retail developments. [17068]

Sir Paul Beresford: There is no information available for out-of-town retail development, or for retailing generally, back to 1979, but for the past six years the number of retail applications called in were:

1990: One

1991: 21 of which 10 were covered by one inquiry and eight others were covered by three inquiries

1992: 9

1993: 10

1994: 34 of which nine were covered by two inquiries

1995: 44 of which 21 are covered by three inquiries.

These figures include "twin-track" applications—multiple applications for different proposals for the same site, and applications for overlapping sites. Most of these were for out-of-centre locations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to remove capping from local authorities in the Greater Manchester area. [17090]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment restated his provisional capping intentions on 31 January. The criteria and capping limit are necessarily provisional and he will announce his decisions on capping once authorities have set their budgets.

Housing Starts

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of (a) council and (b) private housing starts in England in 1995. [16719]

Mr. Clappison: Provisional estimates for 1995 show that around 137,000 new dwellings were started in England during 1995: of these, private enterprise builders started 110,900, housing associations about 25,600 and local authorities some 600.

While these figures cover newly built accommodation, housing associations and local authorities have also provided additional social lettings by the rehabilitation of existing properties and through various home incentive schemes.

Cemfuel Burning

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution's variation notice concerning the burning of cemfuel by Castle Cement at Clitheroe cancels previous authorisations and variations. [16721]

Mr. Clappison: The variation notice issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to Castle Cement at Clitheroe on 23 January 1996 replaced all the conditions in the original authorisation and previous variations.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution authorisation allowing the burning of cemfuel by Castle Cement at Clitheroe is due for automatic review. [16722]

Mr. Clappison: Authorisations issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 are reviewed not less frequently than once in every four years. The authorization issued to Castle Cement at Clitheroe was reviewed prior to the issue of a variation notice on 23 January 1996. The next review is thus due by January 2000.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons the variation in the authorisation by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution allowing the burning of cemfuel by Castle Cement has not been classified as a substantial variation. [16723]

Mr. Clappison: The authorisation issued to Castle Cement in 1993 allowed the burning of cemfuel. The recent variation to this authorisation was issued to set additional controls on the use of cemfuel and limits on the releases to air. Although this did not constitute a substantial change, public and statutory consultations were carried out as required for a substantial change.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the inclusion of pesticides in cemfuel was authorised. [16724]

Mr. Clappison: Pesticides are not permitted to be included in cemfuel. The varied authorisation includes a requirement to carry on the process in the manner described in the application and the application contains a specific exclusion for pesticides.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what constituent parts of cemfuel are now allowed which were prohibited under the authorisation which applied prior to 23 January. [16725]

Mr. Clappison: There are no constituent parts of cemfuel now allowed which were prohibited prior to 23 January.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what limits on particulates and other residues deriving from the burnings of cemfuel apply to Castle Cement at Clitheroe; what limits apply at other similar sites; and what factors underlie disparities between these figures. [16759]

Mr. Clappison: Limits set by an authorisation are always site specific, being governed by the fundamental legislative requirement for an operator to use BATNEEC—best available techniques not entailing excessive cost. Differences between sites are therefore to be expected.

Castle Cement, Clitheroe—particulate limit = 90mg/m³.

This represents a tightening of the previous limit of 100mg/m³ and is considered to be achievable based on experience to date. The company is also required to submit proposals for reducing the level of particulates released to air to that expected of a new plant.

Castle Cement, Ketton—particulate limits of 90 mg/m³ (kiln 7) and 50mg/m³ (kiln 8).

With effect from July 1996, kiln 7 will be required to achieve a limit of 50mg/m³. Kiln 8 is a very modern kiln which experience has shown to be able to meet the new plant standard. Kiln 7 is under going a major upgrade to increase its capacity. It is therefor being required to meet the new plant standard as required by chief inspector's guidance note IPR3/1. These limits are completely independent of the use of cemfuel and would have been required whatever the fuel.

Rugby Cement, Barrington—particulate limit = 120mg/m³

This limit will be reviewed following upgrading of the electrostatic precipitators and a limit of 45mg/m³ is effective from 1 April 1998.

According to chief inspector's guidance note IPR3/1, 1 April 1998 is the date when operators are expected to be able to achieve new plant standards.

The limits required of a new incinerator have been applied at all three sites in respect of dioxins and furans, cadmium and thallium, mercury and group III metals.

Lanehead Quarry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the environmental impact of the depth of the Lanehead Quarry. [16726]

Sir Paul Beresford: I understand that the local minerals planning authority, Lancaster county council, is currently in negotiation with the operators of this quarry in relation to updating its operational and restoration conditions. Any assessment of the environmental impact of the depth of the quarry is, therefore, a matter for the county council.

Planing Inquiries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning inquiries are awaiting determination by (a) inspectors and (b) local authorities. [17091]

Sir Paul Beresford: Following local inquiries, 73 planning appeals in England are currently awaiting decision by inspectors, and 41 planning appeals and 42 called in planning applications are awaiting decision by my right hon. Friend following receipt of the inspector's report.

Sainsbury, Islington

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons he called in the application by Sainsbury plc for a retail outlet on Holloway road, Islington. [17069]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment called in the application so that he could consider the issues it raises. Among the matters appearing likely to be relevant to his consideration are the effects of the development on the vitality and viability of the nearby Nags Head centre, the effects of the development on the character and amenities of the area, the likely effects of the development on the traffic movements on the nearby road network and the loss of land for industrial development.

Planning Applications

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since 1979 the number of times he has exercised his planning call-in powers; and on how many occasions he has overturned the inspector's decision. [17067]

Sir Paul Beresford: The number of planning applications in England called in since the financial year 1986–87 is as follows:

Year	Number
1986–87	152
1987–88	113
1988–89	117
1989–90	103
1990–91	132
1991–92	140
1992–93	101
1993–94	99
1994–95	[1]167

[1] 30 of these cases relate to a single site in Devonport and a further 15 arose in Cornwall. Where the local authorities went against national planning guidance.

Since 1 April 1994, the Secretary of State has determined called-in applications against the inspector's recommendation on 11 occasions.

Information for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure and loan sanction by his Department on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95 broken down by category. [16771]

Sir Paul Beresford: The table sets out (i) expenditure by my Department on grants to local authorities; and (ii) credit approvals and borrowing approvals issued to local authorities and local councils on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95.

Green Environment, Greater Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the work of his Department in relation to promoting a green environment in the Greater Manchester area. [17058]

Mr. Clappison: My Department helps to promote a green environment, both nationally and locally, through its various policies and initiatives. In Greater Manchester, the Government office for the north-west, and organisations supported by my Department, such as the Mersey Basin Campaign, Groundwork and the Red Rose forest initiative are all carrying out work to enhance the environment.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each local authority in receipt of grant aid under the single regeneration budget and its predecessors together with the sums they received as a cumulative total and for each year since 1979. [17071]

Sir Paul Beresford: The total amounts received by local authorities in grant aid each year since 1989–90, under the programmes which now form the single regeneration budget, are as follows.

1989–90	309,032,000
1990–91	325,942,000
1991–92	326,896,000
1992–93	387,985,000
1993–94	511,880,000
1994–95	405,312,000
1995–96[1]	734,085,000

[1] Forecast.

The 1995–96 forecast total includes grant payments from the single regeneration budget challenge fund to local partnerships, where a local authority is the nominated accountable body for the partnership. Local authorities may also be receiving grant indirectly where they are members of such partnerships, but are not the accountable bodies.

A breakdown of the totals by each recipient local authority, with information for earlier years than 1989–90, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cemfuel Burning

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution authorisation for the burning of cemfuel in cement kilns complies with the application of the proposed EU directive on hazardous waste. [16908]

Mr. Clappison: Maximum thermal substitution has been restricted to 40 per cent. as per article 3(3) and the cemfuel has been specified as per article 3(4) of the directive. Emission limits have been set as required by the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the chief inspector's guidance notes. As long as cemfuel remains defined as waste, all relevant provisions of the directive will apply from the date defined in the directive.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has evaluated alleging that burning (a) tyres, (b) sewage sludge and (c) polychlorinated biphenyls in cement kilns is safe. [16727]

Mr. Clappison: The criteria used by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in determining the safe use of a waste fuel in cement kilns is to require the operator to undertake trials and to prove that such burning will not result in adverse environmental effects. One plant has carried out such trials with burning of tyre chips and proved that there was no adverse effect on the environment. There have been no trials on the burning of sewage sludge or PCBs.

Housing, Greater Manchester

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to develop a housing strategy for the Greater Manchester area. [17039]

Mr. Clappison: None. It is for individual local authorities to draw up housing strategies for their areas in consultation with all interested parties.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further measures he plans to control houses in multiple occupation in the Greater Manchester area. [17057]

Mr. Clappison: Further measures to control houses in multiple occupation are contained in the Housing Bill, which is currently being considered in Committee. The measures in the Bill will, when enacted, apply to Greater Manchester as elsewhere in England and Wales.

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown of the number of people who were accepted as homeless in the Greater Manchester area over the last 10 years by (a) sex and (b) age group; and if he will make a statement. [17038]

Mr. Clappison: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the successful bids under round one of the single regeneration budget by region and value of grant. [17070]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested was placed in the Library of the House and circulated to hon. Members on 6 December 1994. I have sent further copies to the hon. Member.

Mobile Homes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the number of people living in mobile homes that are connected to mains electricity. [16760]

Mr. Clappison: This information is given in paragraph 197 of the report "Mobile Homes Survey", DOE 1992, copies of which were placed in the House of Commons Library at the time of publication.

Local Plans

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many and which local authorities have not adopted local plans. [17064]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Town and Country Planning Act 1990, as amended by the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, requires all non-metropolitan district councils in England to prepare a local plan for the whole of their area. These area-wide plans will replace any local plans that may have previously been prepared for part or parts of an authority's area. On 30 September 1995, 214 out of the 295 non-metropolitan authorities had not yet adopted their district-wide local plan. The authorities are as follows. Those marked [2] were fully covered by part-area local plans; those marked [1] were partly covered by local plans.

Derelict Land

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what moneys are available from his Department for the restoration of land which is the subject of industrial dereliction in the Greater Manchester area. [17059]

Sir Paul Beresford: In 1994–95, English Partnerships contributed finance under its investment fund of £12.369 million to local authority land reclamation schemes in the Greater Manchester area. In addition, it contributed £8.173 million of finance to regeneration projects carried out in partnership with private sector companies.

The Department's challenge fund and city challenger programme also contribute to schemes that include the reclamation of derelict land in Greater Manchester.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on local government spending in the Greater Manchester area. [17040]

Sir Paul Beresford: No. Decisions on local government spending are a matter for the authorities concerned.

Local Authority Guidance

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been issued to local authorities on the implementation of sections 28 and 29 of the Local Government Act 1988; and what revisions have been made to that guidance. [16753]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have issued no guidance to local authorities on these provisions of the Local Government Act 1988.

Industrial Asthma

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases of industrial asthma have been recorded in the past 10 years; and how many cases of industrial asthma where the sensitiser was flour have been recorded since the milling and handling of flour became recognised as a cause of industrial asthma. [16897]

Sir Paul Beresford: The table shows the number of new cases of assessed disablement from occupational asthma from prescribed agents under the industrial injuries scheme in Great Britain. The first complete year of record is 1983.

Year	Total new cases	Cases due to flour and grain dust
1983	183	54
1984	137	32
1985	166	54
1986	166	46
1987	220	50
1988	222	40
1989	220	43
1990	216	55
1991	293	64
1992	553	60
1993	510	66
1994	506	59

No provisional estimates for 1995 is yet available as the data are still being collated and checked by the Department of Social Security.

Inland Waterways

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what exemptions for measurement of speed and distance in kilometres are included in United Kingdom regulations concerned with inland waterways; and what indications of such exemptions were included in information circulars used in related consultative procedures. [16730]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The regulations apply to all waterways except those used for sea transport, where units of measurement are laid down in international conventions or agreements.

My Department has advised inland navigation authorities accordingly.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS Ltd. indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17445]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department currently holds the following contracts with Electronic Data Systems:

Date of Inception	Value £ thousand	Duration
October 1992	358	3.5 years
March 1995	30	1 year
December 1995	6	8 months

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17308]

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade, on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

High-voltage Power Cables

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has received about the effect of proximity to high-voltage power cables on the value of houses. [17130]

Mr. Clappison: None.

Mesothelioma and Lung Cancer

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated annual cost to employers of employees developing mesothelioma or lung cancer. [17224]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is not available.

Odden's Pump

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated as to changes in the operation of Odden's Pump off the coast of Greenland. [17183]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The European Commission has initiated a research study into changes in the Odden feature. A report on the first phase is expected in April.

Groundwater Levels, London

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken following the report of the Construction Industry Research and Information Association in 1989 on the problems of groundwater levels in London. [17507]

Sir Paul Beresford: Following its report in 1989 CIRIA, undertook a two-year study of groundwater levels in the Whitehall area. Property Holdings then funded this research for another four years until 1995. The study concluded that there was a seasonal change in water levels but no evidence of any long-term rise in groundwater levels.

All Government buildings are inspected every three months. This enables problems of water penetration to be detected and cured at an early stage. No Government building is in imminent danger from rising groundwater as far as we are aware.

Habitats

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he plans to introduce immediately in response to the Biodiversity United Kingdom steering group report relating to the management of environmentally important United Kingdom habitats. [16807]

Mr. Clappison: The Biodiversity steering group chaired by my Department, with members drawn from all sectors, was set up to advise the Government on individual costed action plans for selected species and habitats, a forward programme for improving biological recording and monitoring in the UK and a programme for improving public awareness and involvement in conserving biodiversity.

The group published its findings on 13 December 1995. "Biodiversity: The UK Steering Group Report" contains a number of proposals including costed action plans for 14 key habitats. It also recommends that costed action plans for a further 24 key habitats be produced within three years. Each of the habitat action plans contains proposals for the management of the habitat.

The Government are currently considering the advice and recommendations in the report and expect to publish their response in the spring of 1996.

Marine Nature Reserves

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase the number of marine nature reserves. [16808]

Mr. Clappison: None in England. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is currently considering a proposal to designate the Menai straits as a marine nature reserve. Some 36 marine areas containing rare or endangered habitats and species have been identified as possible special areas of conservation under the habitats directive.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action will be taken to protect sensitive and nationally important United Kingdom habitats from the effects of air pollution. [16809]

Mr. Clappison: The Government are taking a range of measures to improve air quality throughout the United Kingdom and planning to publish a consultation document on a national air quality strategy later this year which will build on existing national and EC legislation in this area.

The UK is also committed as a signatory to various protocols under the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe convention on long-range transboundary air pollution to reducing emissions of a range of air pollutants which have harmful effects on health and the environment.

Water Leakages

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress has been made in the establishment of voluntary targets by water companies in controlling leakage; [17432]

(2) if he will list those water companies which have established, but not published, targets for the control of water leakage; [17434]

(3) if he will list those water companies which have not established targets for the control of water leakage; [17478]

(4) if he will list those water companies which have published targets for the control of water leakage, together with the targets involved and the time scale over which they are to be achieved. [17433]

Mr. Clappison: My answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mrs. Jackson) on 10 January, Official Report, column 210, indicated that all water companies supplied projections of water balances to the Director General of Water Services as part of his quinquennial review.

More recently, eight of the water service companies—Anglian Water, North West Water, Severn Trent Water, Southern Water, South West Water, Thames Water, Wessex Water and Yorkshire Water—have made announcements concerning their plans for tackling leakage. The director general is continuing discussions with the water companies on their current intentions.

Water Meters

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the expenditure by water authorities and companies on the installation of water meters in domestic properties in (a) 1985, (b) 1990 and (c) 1995. [17387]

Mr. Clappison: This information is not kept centrally.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those water companies which offer a choice to customers living in newly built homes about whether or not they pay for water and sewerage services by meter; and if he will list the choice offered in each case. [17411]

Mr. Clappison: Customers living in new domestic properties served by the following companies are charged for water and sewerage services on a flat fee basis:

Dwr Cymru

Northumbrian Water

Hartlepool Water

Portsmouth Water

Sutton Water

York Waterworks.

Customers of these companies may request to be charged on a measured basis if they are willing to pay for the installation of the meter.

All other water companies charge customers living in new built homes on a metered basis.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his assessment of the number of sites of special scientific interest which could be damaged by water abstraction in 1996–97; [17357]

(2) what is his assessment of the number of sites of special scientific interest that were damaged by water abstraction in 1995–96. [17358]

Mr. Clappison: English Nature is at present assessing, in consultation with the National Rivers Authority, 148 sites of special scientific interest in England which may be affected by water abstraction. A report is expected next month.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from English Nature on the impact of water abstraction on sites of special scientific interest and what response he has made. [17359]

Mr. Clappison: In October 1992, English Nature submitted a response to the Department's consultation document "Using Water Wisely". In January this year, it made representations about Yorkshire Water's proposals for a drought order to take additional water from the River Derwent near York. The company requested postponement of a hearing on this order to enable further discussion to take place.

Air Pollution

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the 1996–97 charging scheme for local authority air pollution control under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. [18261]

Mr. Clappison: Charges to cover the costs of local enforcing authorities in regulating processes which are subject to part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 were introduced in April 1991.

With the approval of the Treasury, and following consultation with local authority associations and industry, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales have made a revised scheme specifying the scale of fees and charges to take effect from 1 April 1996. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is revising the parallel scheme for Scotland on the same basis, and will be making a separate announcement.

The main changes are that the standard application fee is increased by £25 to £1,015, the application fee for a former Alkali Act works is increased by £15 to £610, the substantial change fee is increased by £15 to £650, and the annual subsistence charge is increased by £20 to £625.

The scheme will be laid before both Houses and a copy placed in the Libraries.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Hawkins) on 13 February, Official Report, column 514, if he will define the term parliamentary interest. [16146]

Mr. Kirkhope: In my answer of 13 February, Official report, column 514, the term parliamentary interest refers to cases in which a Member of Parliament or a noble Lord has made representations about the proposed removal of somebody from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been issued to Home Office presenting officers and adjudicators regarding the period of time in which couples are expected to become self-supporting in the United Kingdom where one spouse has been granted entry clearance; when such guidance was issued; and if he will make a statement. [18206]

Mr. Kirkhope: No such guidance has been issued to presenting officers. The period of time in which couples are expected to become self-supporting will depend on the facts of the particular case. Guidance to adjudicators is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor.

Dartmoor Prison (Death)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects the medical report into the death of Mr. Dennis Stevens in Dartmoor prison to be completed; and if he will make a statement on the causes of Mr. Stevens' death; [17336]

(2) for how long Mr. Dennis Stevens was kept in a body belt in Dartmoor prison prior to his death on 18 October 1995; [17338]

(3) what representations he has received alleging (a) improper procedures and (b) inadequacy in existing procedures in matters relating to the death of Mr. Dennis Stevens in Dartmoor prison; what response he has made; when he expects all the information on this case to be disclosed; and if he will make a statement. [17337]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 29 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about the death of Mr. Dennis Stevens in Dartmoor prison.

Mr. Stevens was in a body belt for 24 hours prior to being discovered dead in his cell on the morning of 18 October 1995.

There have been two post-mortems, the second attended by a pathologist representing Mr. Stevens' family. At the second post-mortem, it was agreed that further specialist forensic analysis was required. The coroner will open the inquest once the result of that analysis, which is being carried out in the United States, is available.

A number of Members, prisoners' rights groups and others have written to express concern about the circumstances surrounding Mr. Stevens' death. They have been advised that a senior prison governor has conducted an enquiry into the circumstances surrounding Mr. Stevens' death and a separate enquiry into the control and restraint methods used has been commissioned. These enquiries will be in addition to the formal policy enquiry, which is underway.

The results of the enquiries into this tragic incident cannot be made available until the inquest. However, I can assure you and Mr. Stevens' family that the service will respond promptly and positively to any recommendations made by the coroner.

Construction Skills Certification Scheme

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to ensure that personnel on its prison construction sites have construction skills certification scheme accreditation. [17437]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. John Spellar, dated 29 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your Question about construction skills certification scheme accreditation on prison construction sites.

It is the duty of the main contractor with whom the Home Office enters into a contract, to ensure that personnel on construction sites have the necessary skills.

The Home Office is considering the introduction of clauses in construction contracts to bring to bear on the main contractor an obligation to ensure that personnel on prison construction sites have construction skills certification scheme accreditation.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors, other than population, determine Metropolitan police officer numbers per division. [17429]

Mr. Maclean: The deployment of manpower within the Metropolitan police district is a matter for the commissioner. I understand, however, that the allocation of officers to divisions takes account of, among other things, the number of crimes reported, calls for assistance, arrests, traffic accidents and incidents of disorder. In addition, officers in charge of divisional operational command units have some flexibility within their overall budget to decide on the mix of police officers, civil staff and other resources which will best meet local policing needs.

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recent reports by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary on Metropolitan police areas 3 and 4. [18765]

Mr. Howard: Yes. I have today placed in the Library a note of the recommendations from these reports, together with the commissioner's responses and my responses, which take into account the advice I have received from the Metropolitan Police Committee.

Electro-shock Equipment

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British companies have been granted licences under section 5 of the Firearms Act 1982 to (a) handle, (b) store, (c) distribute and (d) manufacture electric shock devices in the last two years. [17363]

Mr. Maclean: Section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 prohibits the possession, purchase, acquisition, manufacture, sale and transfer of electric shock weapons without the authority of the Secretary of State. No company has been granted authority under this section specifically in respect of electric shock weapons in the last two years.

Reoffenders

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to magistrates courts about sentencing in respect of repeated offences of theft and shoplifting goods of significant value. [17508]

Mr. Maclean: The Government do not issue guidance on sentencing. The Magistrates Association issues sentencing guidelines for its members, which are available in the Library, and guidance is provided by Court of Appeal judgments in individual cases.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the asylum appeals passed by the tribunal to the adjudicator in 1994 were allowed by the adjudicator; and how many of these were appeals by port-of-entry applicants; [17540]

(2) how many of the asylum appellants referred by the adjudicator to the Secretary of State in 1994 were granted leave to remain in the United Kingdom; and how many of these were port-of-entry applicants; [17542]

(3) how many of (a) the asylum appeals allowed by the adjudicator and (b) those allowed by the tribunal in 1994 were made by port-of-entry applicants. [17541]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not available.

Docklands Bombing (Fire Appliances)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 15 February, Official Report, column 706, in respect of 9 February only, how many appliances attended the scene, what time the last appliance left and from which stations the appliances were drawn. [17518]

Mr. Sackville: The deployment of appliances is an operational matter for the London fire and civil defence authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to invite the chief officer to provide the details which she has sought.

Older Prisoners

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department has taken to meet the special needs of older people in prison. [17519]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Sir Andrew Bowden, dated 29 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about what action is being taken to meet the special needs of older people in prison.

The Prison Service has recognised the needs of the older prisoner. A special unit is at present being commissioned at HMP Kingston. An existing accommodation block is being refurbished and will include specialist facilities for older prisoners with disabilities. The unit is for 25 prisoners and hopes to receive its first prisoners in May 1996.

The Directorate of Health Care is currently compiling a health strategy for prisoners and staff and has particularly identified the needs of older prisoners amongst its topics. The health strategy will be presented to the Prisons Board in May 1996.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women aged over 60 and men over 65 years are being held in prison on (a) remand and (b) after sentence. [17594]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Sir Andrew Bowden, dated 29 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking, how many women aged over 60 and men over 65 years are being held in prison on (a) remand and (b) after sentence.

On 31 January 1996 there were 16 women aged 60 or over (3 on remand and 13 sentenced) and 300 males (25 remand and 275 sentenced) aged 65 and over in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

Racial Attacks

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported racial attacks there were in each London borough in 1995. [17657]

Mr. Maclean: Figures are not available by London borough. Racial incidents reported to the police in each Metropolitan police division for 1995 are shown in the table. A racial incident is defined as any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident in which an allegation of racial motivation is made by any person.

Bosnian Refugees

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to prepare a register of refugees and displaced persons from Bosnia-Herzegovina living in Britain and listed according to their religious or national background, their place of origin, gender and family connections; and if the Government have received a request from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees to provide such a register. [17710]

Mr. Kirkhope: No formal request has been received from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees but when the UNHCR co-ordinator for former Yugoslavia briefed missions in Geneva recently, he said that accurate information was needed from countries of asylum on how many refugees and displaced persons they had; where they were from, where they wanted to return to, and when. This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only by contacting each person individually. We are considering the request.

Secure Prisons

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently held in secure prison establishments in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17551]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Sir Andrew Bowden, dated 19 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about how many prisoners are currently held in secure prison establishments in Wales.

On 26 February 1996, there were 805 prisoners held in the following establishments.

Carl Bridgewater

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list those individuals who helped the police with their inquiries in connection with the murder of Carl Bridgewater indicating the periods they were kept at each police station; [17205]

(2) if he will list the names of those individuals arrested in connection with the murder of Carl Bridgewater indicating the periods of detention at each police station; [17206]

(3) if he will list the individuals to whom the police made payments for information in respect of the Carl Bridgewater trial; [17204]

(4) if he will make a statement on all meetings between Joseph Hickey and Sergeant Ernest Robinson in (a) 1978 and (b) 1979. [17214]

Mr. Kirkhope: No. These are all operational matters and the responsibility of the chief constable of Staffordshire constabulary.

Fire Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will review his allocation of funds to the fire services of Wales consequent upon the formation of the new local government unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement; [17330]

(2) if he will sanction new funds to enable the new North Wales fire service authority to meet its commitments in Clwyd and Gwynedd counties. [17328]

Mr. Sackville: Supplementary credit approvals of up to £2.7 million have been provisionally set aside for 1996–97 to meet the transitional costs of fire service reorganisation in Wales. The allocation between the three new brigades will be reviewed during the course of the year.

Body Belts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of the Prison Service in respect of the use of the body belt of the type involved in the death of Joy Gardner; when that policy was last reviewed; what plans the Prison Service has to co-ordinate its policy in respect of the belt with the police; and if he will make a statement. [17339]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 29 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about Prison Service policy on the use of body belts of the type involved in the death of Joy Gardner; when that policy was last reviewed and what plans the Prison Service has to co-ordinate its policy in respect of the belt with the Police.

The type of body belt used by the Police is an operational matter for Chief Police Officers.

The body belt used by the Prison Service is of a design approved by Prison Service headquarters. The authority for its use is covered in Prison Standing Order 3E, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The design of the belts used by the Prison Service was reviewed some eighteen months ago. It was decided that the needs of the Service required the current design but we continue to see if more modern materials can be used to serve the same purpose, on the rare occasions body belts are used.

Crime (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of convictions in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands involved 16 to 24-year-olds in each of the last five years; and if he will indicate the year-on-year percentage change in this figure. [17120]

Mr. Maclean: Information which is readily available centrally is restricted to indictable offences and is given in the table. For summary offences, information on the actual age of adults is not available. The information is the latest available; 1995 data will be available in the autumn.

Convictions for indictable offences of persons aged 16 to 24 and of all persons in Coventry Petty Sessional Division (PSD) and West Midlands Police Force Area, for the period 1990 to 1994.

Euro '96

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost of the police operation for the Euro '96 championships; and how many officers will be involved. [17848]

Mr. Maclean: The Association of Chief Police Officers has estimated that the cost of policing for the European football championships 1996 could be around £5.5 million. Decisions about the number of officers involved, and their deployment, are for chief officers of the forces concerned.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received in respect of the financing of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority; how many of these alleged the funding was inadequate; and what was his response. [16292]

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of such representations. Where the question of finance has been raised, the replies have made it clear that it was up to the authority to set a budget which would enable it to comply with its statutory duties.

Football Pools Industry

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his most recent assessment of the impact of the national lottery on the football pools industry; what plans he has to assist the pools industry; and if he will make a statement. [16296]

Mr. Kirkhope: In October 1995, the Pool Promoters Association estimated that the pools industry had lost 30 per cent. of its business since the introduction of the national lottery in November 1994.

The pools industry has benefited substantially from the Government deregulation initiative. In November 1994, the age limit for participation in the football pools was reduced from 18 to 16; the collection of football pools coupons in shops and other premises was legalised; and rollover of prize money was allowed. In March 1995, the prohibition on advertising the football pools on television and radio was lifted. In the Gaming Machines and Betting Office Facilities Order, which was put to the Deregulation Committee of the House in December 1995, we are proposing to allow the payment of football pools winnings in betting offices.

The pools industry has also benefited from reductions in pool betting duty. In May 1995, the duty was reduced from 37.5 per cent. to 32.5 per cent. In his Budget last November, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced a further reduction to 26.5 per cent.

We are currently considering a number of proposals for further relaxation of the restrictions on the pools which have been put forward by the industry. On one of these proposals, to revoke the regulation which prevents pools collectors from selling lottery tickets door to door, we have issued a consultation letter to interested parties.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if prisoners from Buckley Hall prison are eligible for unaccompanied visits to Rochdale as a reward for good behaviour; and if he will make a statement. [18117]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 29 February 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the eligibility of prisoners at Buckley Hall prison to have unaccompanied visits to Rochdale as a reward for good behaviour.

The Prison Service introduced a national framework of incentives and earned privileges for prisoners in July 1995, with most prisons commencing their own local scheme before the end of December. This policy reflects Ministers' and the Prison Service's commitment to a system of structured incentives based on prisoners' behaviour and willingness to cooperate. It seeks to ensure prisoners earn privileges by responsible behaviour and participation in hard work and other constructive activity.

Buckley Hall plan to extend their three-tier incentives and earned privilege scheme by introducing, by the end of March, the key earnable privilege of unaccompanied community visits. Those eligible to apply will be prisoners in security category D who have been retained for outside work parties. Each applicant will be subjected to a full risk assessment before any decision is taken on the granting of temporary release.

Fire Service College

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the accounts for the national Fire Service College for the year 1994–95; and what was the overall financial result. [16731]

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1996, c. 411]: The Fire Service College annual report and accounts were laid before the House of 28 February.

ENVIRONMENT

City Disesel Fuel

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the level of pollutants emitted by city diesel fuel. [17666]

Mr. Clappison: A programme of field trials of alternative fuels, including city diesel, was set up by the Department of Transport, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in March 1994. The trials are assessing the emissions performance, energy consumption and economics of vans and buses using a number of alternative fuels. All vehicles in the trials are to be monitored in-service and up to 22 vans and 26 buses are to be emissions tested using driving cycles which best represent the real world in-service operating conditions for these vehicles. A final report of the project is expected in early 1997.

Pollution Information

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publish pollution information on the Internet. [17911]

Mr. Clappison: I refer to hon. Member to the answer given by the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Sir P. Beresford), on 16 January 1996, Official Report, column 491.

Regional Development Funding (Merseyside)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the use of objective 1 funds in Merseyside; what plans he has to increase Government financial assistance towards European funding; and if he will make a statement. [16295]

Sir Paul Beresford: All claims for payment for projects approved under the programme are accompanied by a report from project sponsors outlining their progress towards delivery of required outputs. Claims received to date indicate that most of the targets are likely to be met or exceeded. In accordance with the regulations governing the structural funds, an interim evaluation of the progress made by the programme so far will shortly be undertaken. The results will be available later in the year.

The structural funds contribute only a part of a project's costs. There are many sources of matching funds, from both the public and the private sectors, for the remaining costs and it is the responsibility of the applicant to explore fully the possibilities before making an application. This is not the responsibility of the Government.

Construction Industry

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the number of prosecutions by the Health and Safety Executive, (b) the number of convictions and (c) the average fine per conviction against employers in the construction industry in each of the last five years. [17835]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Health and Safety Executive's primary aim is to prevent accidents and ill health. In appropriate cases, prosecution may be taken. Details of prosecutions taken by the HSE's field operations division inspectorates, information laid, the number of convictions and the average penalty per conviction in all industrial sectors in each of the last five years was set out in table 24 of the Health and Safety Commissions's statistics 1994–95. The following table provides extracts from this table concerning proceedings in the construction industry.

Prosecutions taken by the HSE's field operations division by result in the construction industry 1990–91 to 1994–95.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of (a) fatalities of workers in the construction industry and (b) members of the public killed by construction accidents in each of the last five years. [17765]

Sir Paul Beresford: The number of fatalities of workers in the construction industry and of members of the public killed by construction accidents in each of the last five years was set out in table 2 of the Health and Safety Commission's statistics 1994–95. The table provides details of fatalities reported to the enforcing authorities in Great Britain.

[2] Workers includes employees and self-employed.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17680]

Sir Paul Beresford: All relevant statistical information about employees of my Department is collected by reference to gender.

In addition, a gender breakdown of the employees of local authorities is collected quarterly by the Central Statistical Office in its "Work Force in Employment" series.

A recent survey sponsored by my Department also collected gender information about occupations in the construction industry.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inspectors are currently employed by the Planning Inspectorate. [17066]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Planning Inspectorate currently employs 209 salaried planning inspectors, 10 of whom work part time.

A further 209 fee-paid inspectors are engaged either on short-term contracts or on a case-by-case basis, to undertake appeals and similar work.

Mine Gas

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he commissioned consultants Wardell Armstrong to undertake an inquiry into the dangers of mine or stythe gas in the Gateshead area; and what were the circumstances which led him to commission the study. [17974]

Sir Paul Beresford: Wardell Armstrong was commissioned to undertake a study of methane and other gases from disused coal mines in the autumn of 1993. The research has included consideration of Gateshead as a demonstration area and of stythe, among other gases. The main aims were, however, to examine the extent to which such emissions should be taken into account in planning of land use and the appropriate means of doing so. The focus, therefore, has been national rather than local.

My Department had previously commissioned a series of general reviews of land instability and related geological issues in order to determine whether there was a need to take more account of these in planning. One of these, a review of naturally occurring contaminants, was undertaken by the British Geological Survey. The report indicated that gas problems associated with old mines were sufficiently widespread to merit more detailed consideration. This led directly to the commissioning of the work being undertaken by Wardell Armstrong.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Wardell Armstrong report on the dangers of mine gas was received by his Department; and if he will publish it. [17975]

Sir Paul Beresford: The final draft of a report by Wardell Armstrong entitled "Methane and other gas emissions from disused coal mines—the planning response" is currently awaited by my Department. It is expected that the report will be published in the summer of 1996.

Proposed Supermarket, Barton-upon-Humber

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce his decision in respect of calling in the application to build a supermarket in Barton-upon-Humber. [18480]

Sir Paul Beresford: The application to which my hon. Friend refers was called in on Tuesday 27 February for determination by the Secretary of State. The application and objections to it will now be examined at a local public inquiry by an independent inspector, who will submit his report to the Secretary of State.

Housing Allocation Schemes

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how Ministers propose to use the powers contained in clause 128 of the Housing Bill to prescribe the criteria to be used in housing allocation schemes; and if he will make a statement. [18764]

Mr. Curry: Our proposals on the allocation criteria to be used are set out in the consultation paper "Allocation of Housing Accommodation by Local Authorities", published earlier this year. Once the consultation has ended and the Government have considered their response, we intend to bring forward, on Report, amendments to set the main allocation criteria in primary legislation. There would be provision to alter them subsequently only by an order subject to affirmative resolution procedure.

TRANSPORT

A46–A47 Link Road

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many meetings his officials have held with Mr. Tommy Morrison of Leicestershire county council to discuss the A46–A47 link road; and what were the dates of those meetings. [17050]

Mr. Norris: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to Mr. Tommy Thompson, CS of LCC. During the year my officials have held regular meetings with officers of Leicestershire county council to discuss progress of all road and rail schemes within the county's transport policies and programme. There have been no meetings held solely to discuss the A46-47 link road.

Central Railway

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have taken place between Central Railway and the railway inspectorate. [18057]

Mr. Watts: I understand that Her Majesty's railway inspectorate met Central Railway plc last year and has commented on the company's outline design specification.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS, indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17455]

Mr. Norris: My Department has five contracts with EDS:

(a) Date of Inception	(c) Duration to
17 December 1993	31 March 1999
17 December 1993	30 June 1999
17 December 1993	31 December 1998
17 December 1993	30 June 1998
14 March 1994	13 March 1996

(b) The value of the contracts is classified commercial in confidence information.

London, Tilbury and Southend Line

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the inquiry into ticketing irregularities on the London, Tilbury and Southend line; when and how he intends to publish the inquiry results; and if he will make a statement. [18222]

Mr. Watts: The inquiry into ticketing irregularities on LTS Rail is being undertaken by the independent Rail Regulator, using his powers under section 58 of the Railways Act 1993. It is for him to decide whether and how the results of the inquiry might be made public. The Rail Regulator has said that he will make a statement once the investigation has been completed.

Eurostar Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the European passenger service from Doncaster to Waterloo is adequately publicised and connects promptly with Eurostar services. [17952]

Mr. Watts: The marketing and timetabling of these services are a matter for the operators, European Passenger Services. I understand that the main marketing thrust will come when the direct Eurostar services from the regions north of London to Paris and Brussels are introduced later this year.

Ministerial Pedestrian Journeys

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all the journeys he made on foot in an official capacity in the week beginning 19 February. [18182]

Sir George Young: I often walk between my Department, meetings in Whitehall and the House.

Sea Empress

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) on what date and time the salvage tug contracted to the Coastguard agency in Stornoway was offered to the salvors of the Sea Empress; what was their response; and when it was made; [18121]

(2) what part of the marine pollution control unit played in the decision to introduce compressed air into the cargo holds of the Sea Empress prior to its refloating on Wednesday 21 February; [18119]

(3) what estimate he had made of the cargo on board the Sea Empress (a) prior to the grounding on Thursday 15 February, (b) prior to the grounding on the evening of Monday 19 February, (c) at 0900 Tuesday 20 February, (d) at 0900 Wednesday 21 February and (e) immediately prior to the refloating on the night of Wednesday 21 February; [18118]

(4) what offers were made by French sources to assist in the Sea Empress incident; when they were made; and of what nature they were. [18120]

Mr. Norris: These matters will be covered by the inquiry being carried out by the marine accident investigation branch, which includes the planning and execution of the salvage operation. I do not wish to prejudge the inquiry's findings.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the names and positions of officials from his Department, the Coastguard agency and the marine pollution control Unit who were present in the operation control room of the Milford Haven coastguard marine rescue centre between 1600 and 1730 hours on Saturday 17 February; [18125]

(2) what are the names and positions of the officials in (a) his Department, (b) the marine pollution control unit and (c) the Coastguard Agency who were present in the operation control room at the Milford Haven coastguard marine rescue centre on the morning of Friday 16 February; [18123]

(3) what was the name of the marine pollution control unit official on the bridge of the Sea Empress between 1600 and 1730 on Saturday 17 February; and what was his position within the MPCU. [18122]

(4) if he will list the individuals from his Department, the Coastguard agency and the marine pollution control unit who travelled to Milford Haven as a result of the Sea Empress incident. [18124]

Mr. Norris: It is the Government's policy not to publish the names of officials engaged in particular tasks unless there are exceptional reasons for doing so. The MAIB investigation will examine all the issues of the salvage operation.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17684]

Mr. Norris: Statistics concerning staff employed in my Department are normally based on pay and personnel records which include information on gender. Statistical information about personnel can therefore usually be broken down by gender. Similarly, all travel statistics collected by the Department include gender, where relevant.

Catford Loop Line

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many passenger trains run along the Catford loop line in both directions, in any 24-hour period between Monday and Friday, and Saturday and Sunday; and at what times these trains are travelling along the Catford loop line. [18197]

Mr. Norris: The number of passenger trains scheduled to travel over the Catford loop line is as follows:

London direction:

Mondays to Fridays–42

Saturdays–34

Sundays–17.

Bromley South direction:

Mondays to Fridays–41

Saturdays–36

Sundays–16.

In addition, the line may be used by empty passenger trains and also those diverted because of engineering works or operating difficulties. The time of all the scheduled services are to be found in the "Great Britain Passenger Railway Timetable".

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many freight trains run along the Catford loop line in both directions, in any 24-hour period between Monday and Friday, and Saturday and Sunday; and at what times these trains are travelling along the Catford loop line. [18196]

Mr. Norris: The number of freight trains that run along the Catford loop in either direction is as follows:

Monday to Friday

Up to 29 trains per day moving towards London distributed throughout the 24 hours.

Up to 32 trains per day moving away from London distributed throughout the 24 hours.

Saturday

Up to 16 trains per day moving towards London distributed throughout the 24 hours.

Up to 22 trains per day moving away from London distributed throughout the 24 hours.

Sunday

Up to 16 trains per day moving towards London distributed throughout the 24 hours.

Up to 2 trains per day moving away from London distributed throughout the 24 hours.

There may be additional or replacement services to run as a result of the need for track maintenance or for diversions.

Waste (Illegal Discharges)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many convictions have been secured at the sheriff court for the illegal discharge of oil or waste at sea in each of the past seven years; what were the fines imposed; what was the number and proportion of United Kingdom registered vessels involved in such cases; and if he will make a statement. [17481]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 24 January, Official Report, column 270, and on 31 January, Official Report, columns 807–808.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chechnya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Russian Government on the present conflict on Chechnya; and what was their response. [17217]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary last discussed Chechnya with the former Russian Foreign Minister Kozyrev in Moscow on 5 September. At that time the Russian Government were experiencing problems over the implementation of the military agreement negotiated in July 1995 with Chechen rebels but were hoping for a political solution within the Russian constitution.

Since then we have been maintaining a dialogue through diplomatic channels, and supporting, with our EU partners, the efforts of the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe to promote a negotiated settlement.

War Crimes Tribunal

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries from which investigators are drawn by the UN war crimes tribunal on the former Yugoslavia. [16289]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The employment policy of the international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia is identical to that operated throughout the UN. Article 101 of the UN charter states that

"paramount consideration in the employment of staff... shall be... the highest standards of efficiency, competence and integrity".

The UN also aims to recruit staff from a wide geographical base. The tribunal will not divulge details of its investigators, including nationalities.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many of the Croats indicted for war crimes by the war crimes tribunal have been indicted for crimes committed in (a) Bosnia and (b) the Krajina. [16290]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The international criminal court for the former Yugoslavia has announced indictments against seven Croats to date. All of these were indicted for crimes allegedly committed in the territory of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Bosnian Government in respect of the discovery by the implementation forces of concealed weapons in the Sarajevo area; and if the discovery is being referred to the war crimes tribunal. [16293]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We continue to urge all parties in the former Yugoslavia to meet their obligations under the Dayton peace agreement. The United Kingdom was presented at the Rome summit on 17 to 18 February where the parties reaffirmed their commitment to that agreement and took positive steps towards resolving outstanding incidences of non-compliance. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed a range of compliance issues with Bosnian President Izetbegovic, the commander of the implementation force, and the High Representative when he visited Sarajevo on 20 February. Concealment of weapons does not constitute a war crime. It does not therefore fall within the mandate of the international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

Military Trade

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will prohibit British military trade with undemocratic regimes; and if he will make a statement. [18218]

Mr. David Davis: It is our policy to support the sale of British defence equipment overseas where this is compatible with our political, strategic and security interests. We defend ourselves and should not deny others the right to do the same without good reason. We observe strict responsibility in our defence exports. We consider applications for licences to export defence equipment on a case-by-case basis in the light of established criteria including the international guidelines and obligations to which we are committed. These criteria include consideration of the recipient country's human rights record. We do not export defence equipment likely to be used for internal repression.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17681]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Statistics concerning staff employed in this Department are normally based on pay and personnel records which include information on gender. Statistical information about personnel can therefore usually be broken down by gender.

British Aerospace

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he and (b) his Ministers have had over the last five years concerning the sale by British Aerospace to India of Hawk 100 aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [18199]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: During the last five years there have been a number of occasions when Foreign Office Ministers have commended Hawk to the Indian authorities.

India and Pakistan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what mechanisms he informs the Home Secretary when he reaches a decision on whether (a) India and (b) Pakistan is a candidate for designation as a country where there is in general no serious risk of persecution; and if he will make a statement. [18132]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has already informed his right hon. and learned Friend Friend the Home Secretary of his agreement to the proposed list of designated countries, which includes India and Pakistan. No actual designation will be possible until clause 1 of the Asylum and Immigration Bill comes into force, and an order has been made under it.

Yemen (British Council Office)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had in relation to the closure of the British Council office in Yemen. [18129]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None. The British Council is still considering how best to make the necessary adjustments to its programmes and activities following the latest public expenditure round.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16567]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Where officials criticised in the Scott report had acted conscientiously, in good faith and in accordance with Government policy, it would not normally be appropriate to take disciplinary action against them. If there are cases where disciplinary action is considered appropriate, this would be carried out under normal departmental disciplinary procedure.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to the ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17309]

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what review has been undertaken by his Department of its role in overseeing export licence applications for technologies with the capability of assisting in the manufacture of nuclear weapons since the publication of the Scott report. [17578]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Members to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions Her Majesty's Government intend to take to improve the relationship between the United Kingdom and Kenya. [17101]

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom has long-standing and deep-rooted links with Kenya, one of our most significant partners in Africa. The bilateral relationship spans wide-ranging areas of activity, many of them outside the framework of Government contacts. We maintain a close dialogue with the Kenyan authorities, one objective of which is to strengthen bilateral relations.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all cases brought under fair employment legislation against (a) a Government Department and (b) a public body, indicating in each case the costs incurred in defending such action. [15150]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of cases registered with the fair employment tribunal under the Fair Employment Act (Northern Ireland) 1989 against (a) Government Departments and (b) public bodies is as follows:

(a) NIO/NI Departments
11 completed
31 withdrawn
33 on-going.

(b) Public bodies[1]
46 completed
49 withdrawn
50 on-going.

[1]This excludes public bodies for which the Department of Health and Social Services is responsible.

Information on the costs incurred in defending these cases is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Criminals (Damages)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what power he has, when convicted criminals initiate actions for damages against the Government or their agencies, to commence a counterclaim for (a) the costs to the state of the criminal's activities, (b) any moneys incurred by the state to aid or recompense their victims and (c) the costs of their trial and any legal aid; and if he will make a statement; [16743]

(2) how many claims for recompense his Department has commenced against convicted criminals in the last five years; and if there is a standing instruction to pursue this option in suitable circumstances. [16744]

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. and learned Friend has no power to counterclaim against a convicted criminal who has initiated an action for damages against the Government or their agencies, except in the exceptional case where the Northern Ireland Office itself would be entitled to claim—for instance, where a criminal's activities had damaged Northern Ireland Office property.

However, regardless of whether a convicted criminal is claiming damages against the Government or their agencies, the Secretary of State may apply to the county court for an order directing the offender to reimburse an amount equal to the whole or part of any compensation, paid or payable under the criminal compensation legislation, which is directly attributable to the offence of which the offender was convicted.

The total value of such recoveries under the criminal damage and criminal injuries schemes, over the last five years, is as follows:

1990–91: £65,000

1991–92: £182,000

1992–93: £232,000

1993–94: £246,000

1994–95: £376,000.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17687]

Sir John Wheeler: A wide range of statistics are collected by the Northern Ireland Departments to inform decision making. Data on major statistical series are broken down by gender where relevant.

Independent Commissioner for Holding Centres

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's third annual report as Independent Commissioner for Holding Centres. [18766]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have today arranged for the copies of Sir Louis Blom-Cooper's annual report for 1995 to be placed in the Library.

I am grateful to the commissioner for his report and for the assurance that it provides that he has found absolutely nothing that might give anyone the slightest cause for concern about the care and treatment of detainees held in the custody of uniformed officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

I shall be studying the recommendations which Sir Louis has made carefully in the light of the changed circumstances since the ending of Provisional IRA's cessation of military operations.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means and on what criteria she intends to apportion vouchers distributed to parents for early-age education, where in any of the areas designated for phases 1 of the scheme the places offered by providers are fewer than the number of pupils whose parents have applied for vouchers. [17876]

Mr. Robin Squire: No such apportioning of vouchers will take place. All parents of all eligible four-year-olds in the phase 1 authorities will receive vouchers.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each training and enterprise council (a) how much was spent on administration in 1994–95 and (b) the number of staff employed in (i) 1992–93, (ii) 1993–94 and (iii) 1994–95 (A) for each TEC and (B) by all TECs. [18098]

Mr. Paice: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 February, Official Report, columns 483–84. This shows the amounts spent on administration in 1994–95 for each training and enterprise council and by all TECs. As TECs are private limited companies, they do not provide information to the DFEE on the number of staff they employ.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the savings to be made as a result of full implementation of the efficiency scrutiny report into the training and enterprise management fee and administrative costs. [18097]

Mr. Paice: I expect to publish shortly details of the action that the Department plans to take in response to the recent efficiency scrutiny into the training and enterprise council contract and management fee. We believe that implementation of the Department's plans will reduce costs significantly. However, estimates of total savings will need to await detailed discussions with TECs over the coming month.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if asylum seekers who are currently enrolled on Government-funded training courses remain eligible to receive the full training allowance (a) if they are in-country asylum seekers, (b) if their application for asylum is refused and (c) while awaiting the outcome of an appeal; and if she will make a statement; [18128]

(2) if (a) future in-country asylum applicants and (b) asylum seekers whose application has been refused will remain eligible for training for work after obtaining permission to work; in what circumstances they will be entitled to receive a training allowance; and how the training allowance will be calculated. [18131]

Mr. Paice: Eligibility for Government-funded training programmes, and for training allowances, is a matter for the Department for Education and Employment.

Asylum seekers remain eligible for Government-funded training programmes while they retain the Home Office's permission to work in the United Kingdom. They must fulfil the other eligibility criteria for those programmes which apply to all UK residents. Asylum seekers receive training allowances on the same basis as other trainees.

Social Fund Training Programmes

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the average number of unemployed claimants in 1996–97 who participate in European social fund training programmes. [18113]

Mr. Forth: It is not possible to estimate the number of unemployed claimants participating in ESF training programmes. Although the majority of participants are unemployed, they do not have to be claimant unemployed to be eligible for ESF support and this information is not therefore recorded.

Jobmatch Scheme

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of making the jobmatch pilot a nationwide scheme. [18101]

Mr. Forth: At this stage of the jobmatch pilots, there is insufficient evaluation information available to be able to estimate accurately the effects on public revenues.

Assisted Places

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will announce the allocation of extra assisted places among schools in England for 1996–97. [18726]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There has been an excellent response to my announcement of 29 November inviting bids for the first instalment of the expansion of the assisted places scheme from September 1996. Over 400 schools applied for more than 7,400 new entry places this year. Bids were also received for over 5,200 additional places in 1997.

I have allocated over 4,000 new entry places at around 280 schools in England for the academic year 1996–97. This is a significant contribution to expansion. As successive years' entries move up through the schools, the total number of places will eventually double the 34,000 currently available in England. Over half the new places will be for secondary pupils entering at ages 11 to 13 as in the existing scheme, and about a quarter for direct sixth form entry. Subject to parliamentary approval, I also intend to make places available for children to enter the scheme below the age of 11 at schools which have an integral junior department.

I am placing in the Library of the House a list of the 226 schools currently participating in the scheme which will be increasing the number of assisted places. These amount to around 2,800 new entry places.

A further 60 schools will be new to the scheme and have not previously had assisted places. I am completing negotiations with these on the provision of about 1,100 new entry places, and will place a list in the Library shortly.

I will also announce shortly the allocation of some 100 additional aided places under the parallel at specialist schools for talented pupils of music and dance.

Every region of England will benefit from these allocations. Nearly two fifths of the new places will be in girls' schools, and the remainder in coeducational and boys schools. This new tranche of assisted places secures an equitable distribution across the scheme as a whole.

Many of the independent schools in the scheme serve major urban areas. I am asking those schools where appropriate to encourage applications for places for pupils from inner-city areas and the ethnic minority communities.

All the schools receiving allocations for 1996 achieve outstanding GCSE and A-level results and maintain strong sixth forms. Many of the other schools bidding for places also have excellent records, and I regret that it was not possible to accommodate them within the provision available for the first instalment. I am keen to offer further allocations of new entry places for 1997, and to extend places to separate preparatory schools for pupils aged below 11 and to encourage schools to develop distinctive facilities for pupils within particular needs.

The extension of the assisted places scheme improves the opportunities for able children from less well-off families to benefit from the excellent education offered by all the schools participating in it.

TREASURY

Taxation

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total yield from higher and lower rate taxpayers in 1994–95 for each English county or tax area. [16769]

Mr. Jack: The table provides estimates based on the survey of personal incomes for 1993–94, the latest available year for which information can be provided below the United Kingdom level.

VAT (Leisure Complexes)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those member counties of the European Union which allow reduced VAT rates for leisure complexes; and in each case what is the ordinary rate and the reduced rate and the date on which the concession was made. [17790]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There is no common definition of leisure complexes. However, under the terms of the relevant EC agreements on VAT, member states have the option to apply reduced rates to certain specified goods and services, which include admission to sporting events and the use of sporting facilities. On the basis that those two categories most closely equate to leisure complexes, the table lists the member states that apply reduced rates. Detailed information on the date of introduction of the reduced rates is not readily available although, in general, reduced rates tend to date from the time when VAT was first introduced in the member state concerned.

Government Deficits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outturn against the Treasury Red Book forecast of Government deficits as a percentage of gross domestic product in the last four years including 1995 using the public sector borrowing requirement and Maastricht convergence, GGFD—general Government financial deficit—methods of measurement of Government deficit. [17663]

Mr. Waldegrave: The table sets out the information requested. Calendar year forecasts are not made. Outturns for 1995–96 are not as yet known.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the net subsidy to the nuclear generation industry from the Exchequer in 1995 prices in each year since 1996 to the proposed privatisation date of British Energy. [12474]

Mr. Jack: A public corporation's external finance requirement consists broadly of net flows of funds from the Government to the company, plus any net borrowing by the company. The external financing requirements of Nuclear Electric and Scottish Nuclear have been as follows since 1990–91, in 1994–95 prices (million):

	Nuclear Electric	Scottish Nuclear
1990–91	1,384	–2
1991–92	1,287	27
1992–93	1,039	15
1993–94	740	–29
1994–95	483	–48

Note:
1. Negative numbers indicate positive net cash generation by the industry. These funds will have been used for both revenue and capital expenditure. In the years concerned, Nuclear Electric and Scottish Nuclear's expenditure on fixed assets was as follows, in 1994–95 prices (million £):

Prior to 1990, the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board were responsible for most nuclear generation in the UK. The accounts of those companies did not separately identify detailed financial information on nuclear generation.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the next steps review of the Inland Revenue is now complete; and if he will make a statement [18654]

Mr. Jack: The review of the Inland Revenue's next steps arrangements was announced in December 1994, and has been carried out in accordance with the normal arrangements for periodic reviews of next steps bodies. Two of the three elements of the review have now been completed.

The first element of the review required consideration of what are known as the prior options—abolition, privatisation, contractorisation or market testing of all or part of the Department's functions and reconsideration of its organisational structure. The review concluded that there is a continuing need for all the Department's core functions and that the wholesale privatisation of the work of assessing and collecting tax would not be appropriate, but the review also noted that the private sector has played and will continue to play a significant role in the delivery of the Department's business.

Approaching 25 per cent. of the Department's annual running costs have already been contracted out, market tested or benchmarked against other market tests, and the Department's outsourcing contract for information technology services represents one of the largest such public sector arrangements in the world. The review reaffirmed the Inland Revenue's commitment to continue to search for further ways of involving the private sector either directly or indirectly in its work.

The prior options review also concluded that the existing organisational structure based on a number of operational and service executive offices remains sound, and is right for the Inland Revenue.

The second element of the review required evaluation of the effectiveness of the existing arrangements and scope for further improvements. That element took stock of the performance of the executive offices against their objectives and key targets, analysed their relationship with the centre of the Department and considered how existing arrangements might be improved. The results have been very encouraging, showing a marked improvement in performance since the establishment of the executive offices in April 1992, but areas for further development and improvement were identified and will be pursued.

In the light of the findings of the review, the framework documents, which set out the policy and resources framework within which each of the Department's executive offices operates, and the authority, responsibilities and accountability of the controllers, are being revised.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers." [17320]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Mortgage Endowment Policies

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the loss in revenue for each year since 1979 accruing from the granting of mortgage endowment policies. [17474]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 27 February 1996]: The estimated cost of life assurance premium relief on mortgage endowment policy premiums was about £90 million in 1993–94 and £80 million in 1994–95. Information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

These approximate estimates are based on information from the family expenditure survey.

PRIME MINISTER

Export Controls

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to commission an independent review on the power to impose controls on exports from the United Kingdom. [17235]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend, the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Engagements

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 26 February, indicating the purpose of each meeting. [18170]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 29 February. [16238]

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his engagements for Thursday 29 February. [16239]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is carrying out official engagements in the far east.

Downing Street Meetings

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister (1) on how many occasions during the past 12 months he has had meetings at 10 Downing street with (a) Sir Gerrard Neale and (b) Lord Younger; [18208]

(2) what facilities have been extended to Sir Gerrard Neale to have access to 10 Downing street in the past 12 months; and what access he has had to office and telephone facilities. [18207]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

As far as my right hon. Friend is aware, none.

British Aerospace

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions British Aerospace was represented (a) directly and (b) indirectly in groups led by (i) him and (ii) other Ministers to India in each of the last five years; if he will give the dates of such visits; and if he will make a statement. [18127]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

Representatives from British Aerospace have accompanied British Ministers to India on two occasions during the last five years in connection with our trade promotion programme for India.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had relating to the sale by British Aerospace to India of Hawk 100 aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [18133]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I have been asked to reply.

The Indian air force has a requirement for a number of advanced jet trainer aircraft. British Aerospace has offered a variant of the Hawk aircraft to meet that requirement. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has commended the Hawk to the Indian Prime Minister on more than one occasion.

Lord-Lieutenants

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Prime Minister which lord-lieutenants will be affected by the changes in local government organisation that come into operation on 1 April. [18655]

The Prime Minister: On 1 April 1996 the following arrangements will come into effect.

In the former county of Avon

Mr. Jay Tidmarsh will become the new Lord-Lieutenant of the new county of Bristol.

Sir John Wills, Lord-Lieutenant of Somerset, will cover the unitary authorities of Bath and North East Somerset and North Somerset as part of the new ceremonial county of Somerset.

Mr. Henry Elwes, Lord-Lieutenant of Gloucestershire, will cover the unitary authority of South Gloucestershire as part of the new ceremonial county of Gloucestershire.

In the former County of Cleveland

The Lord Gisborough, at present Lord-Lieutenant of Cleveland, will become Lieutenant of North Yorkshire, when the unitary authorities of Middlesbrough, Redcar and Cleveland and Stockton on Tees (south of the River Tees), previously in Cleveland, become part of the new ceremonial county of North Yorkshire.

Sir Marcus Worsley will continue as Lord-Lieutenant of the whole of the county of North Yorkshire, including the new unitary authority of York.

Mr. David Grant, as Lord-Lieutenant of Durham, will cover the unitary authorities of Hartlepool and Stockton on Tees (north of the River Tees) within the new ceremonial county of Durham.

In the former county of Humberside

Mr. Richard Marriott will become the Lord-Lieutenant of the new county of the East Riding of Yorkshire, covering the unitary authorities of Kingston upon Hull and the East Riding of Yorkshire.

Mrs. Bridget Cracroft-Eley, as Lord-Lieutenant of Lincolnshire, will cover the unitary authorities of North and North East Lincolnshire, as part of the new ceremonial county of Lincolnshire.

Information Technology Developments

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Prime Minister how he intends to ensure that the United Kingdom derives maximum benefit from opportunities in developments in multi-media and information technology; and if he will make a statement. [18656]

The Prime Minister: The Government see the development of multi-media and information technology as an exciting area of opportunity for the United Kingdom in which much is already being achieved. These technological innovations are having an important impact on all aspects of our way of life. In the future there will be further opportunities for business to develop new products, services and ways of working; for individuals to adapt their work patterns; for consumers to improve their quality of life with new electronic products and services; and for the providers of services such as health care, education and training to strengthen their quality and delivery.

The Government have been committed to the comprehensive development of these technologies since the early 1980s. By freeing up the market for our telecommunications and broadcasting industries through privatisation and deregulation and promoting the use of computers in schools we have made sure that the UK is in the vanguard of technological change. We are now undertaking a further range of initiatives, most recently through the information society initiative launched last month.

A strong lead is rightly being given by the private sector's enterprise and initiative. That will continue to be supported by a focused and complementary partnership with Government. In order to reinforce that focus and driving force across Government, I have asked my right hon. Friend the First Secretary of State and Deputy Prime Minister to convene a ministerial group with the following terms of reference:

"To identify and take forward significant cross-departmental initiatives to ensure that developments in information technology are exploited to the full in the national interest".

In addition to the chairman, members of the group will be as follows:

President of the Board of Trade

Chief Secretary, Treasury

Secretary of State for National Heritage

Secretary of State for Education and Employment

Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster

Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. David Davis)

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Science and Technology, Department of Trade and Industry (Mr. Ian Taylor).

Other Ministers will be invited to attend for items on which they have a departmental interest. My efficiency adviser and the chief scientific adviser will also attend.

The work of the group will build on the information society initiative and the separate activities of the central information technology unit recently set up in the Office of Public Service to plan the Government's own use of technology. By these means the Government will ensure that there is strengthened stimulus and co-ordination within and beyond Government to enable the UK to derive maximum benefit from the new technology.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Controls

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what review he has undertaken of export controls over dual-use goods. [17222]

Mr. Lang: Her Majesty's Government keep under constant review export controls on dual-use goods. These are mainly based on agreements reached with other member states of the European Union and partners in international export control forums. In addition, some controls are maintained by Her Majesty's Government on a unilateral basis to reflect United Kingdom national security considerations and foreign policy requirements.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral statement on the Scott report of 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604, if he will list the specific responses made by Her Majesty's Government to each of the recommendations relating to policy contained in the report. [18176]

Mr. Lang: Specific responses to the recommendations relating to policy in Sir Richard Scott's report were set out in my speech on 26 February. I have promised to keep the House informed of progress on those that require further consideration prior to implementation. Changes to export control policies and procedures will be the subject of a consultation paper in due course, and I shall also keep the House informed of progress on this matter.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make changes in the personnel of his Department following criticisms contained in the report of the Scott inquiry. [16563]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: Where officials criticised in the Scott report had acted conscientiously, in good faith and in accordance with Government policy, it would not normally be appropriate to take disciplinary action against them. If there are cases where disciplinary action is considered appropriate, this would be carried out under normal departmental disciplinary procedure.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he first consulted with other Cabinet Ministers about the contents of the report of the Scott inquiry; and where and when such discussions took place and with whom. [16518]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 22 February 1996]: It is not the practice to give details of ministerial meetings.

Magnox Reactors

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 13 February to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle), Official Report, column 539, if he will place in the Library the evidence on the economics of continuing to generate electricity from the Magnox stations. [17832]

Mr. Lang: The economic case for continued operation of the Magnox stations was considered in detail as part of the Government's coal review. The conclusions were set out in paragraphs 7.71 to 7.80 of the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal", Cm 2235.

Fossil Fuel Levy

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 511, if he will provide details of the outstanding moneys that the fossil fuel levy will recover after privatisation of Nuclear Electric; and how they will be paid to British Energy. [17834]

Mr. Lang: Any outstanding moneys will be paid to Magnox Electric, rather than British Energy. The amount will depend on a number of factors that are still uncertain, such as the level of electricty consumption this year.

British Aerospace

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions (a) he and (b) his Ministers have had over the last five years concerning the sale by British Aerospace to India of Hawk 100 aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [18198]

Mr. Eggar: A number of DTI Ministers have been involved in discussions and visits with British Aerospace over the last five years which would have included the prospects for Hawk in India.

Regional Enterprise and Technology Schemes

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list what financial assistance has been given since 1980 by his Department to (a) Monderntask Ltd., Redruth, (b) Digitize Ltd., Truro, (c) Thimbles Ltd., Redruth, (d) South West Leisure Products Ltd., Redruth, (e) Van Pieters plc, Pewsey, (f) Pan Atlantic (UK) plc, Birmingham, (g) CSL Group by (i) type of grant and (ii) date. [15775]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 February 1996]: Six of the companies have received assistance under the Department's principal regional, enterprise and technology schemes since 1980:

Company	Scheme	Payment £	Date
Moderntask Ltd.	Regional Development Grant (RDG)	78,228	1991
Thimbles Ltd.	Regional Selective Assistance (RSA)	22,000	1993–94
SW Leisure Products Ltd.	RSA	23,068	1985
	RDG	66,900	1989
Van Pieters plc	Enterprise Initiative (EI)	3,173	1992
Pan Atlantia (UK) Ltd.	RSA	22,000	1993
CSL Group	EI	3,014	1993

Workers' Rights

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action the European Union is taking to promote international rules (i) against (a) forced and (b) child labour and (ii) to guarantee workers' rights to organise and to bargain collectively; if the United Kingdom Government support this action; and if he will make a statement. [16903]

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

The European Commission has recently published a communication which suggested that the World Trade Organisation conference at Singapore

"could take the lead in the discussion and set up a working party to look into the question of the links between international trade and working conditions".

The Government do not accept that there is any link between trade and labour standards and are opposed to any form of coercive trade action designed to impose particular social standards on developing countries. International labour standards are a matter for the International Labour Organisation, not for the WTO.

Cement Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the cement industry and other interested parties about the alleged unfair advantages of the Greek cement industry over others in the EU. [17698]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

No representations have been received from the cement industry or from other interested parties on this matter. However, I am aware that the relevant trade association—Cembureau—has been successful in an application to the European Court of Justice against the European Commission for failing to take appropriate action.

British Library (Documents)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will press for the depositing of (a) the document numbered BL SRIS and (b) "British telecommunications engineering" of January 1996 in the British library. [17155]

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

Without further information it is not possible to identify the first of these two documents: the letters "BL SRIS" refer to the British library's science reference and information service which acquires a large volume of documents for its library collection. I understand that the journal entitled "British telecommunications engineering: the journal of the Institution of British Telecommunications Engineers" is published quarterly. One copy of each issue is deposited with the British library by the publishers, as required under the statutory legal deposit arrangements, and a further copy of each issue is donated to the British library.

The most recent issue of this journal to be received under legal deposit was volume 14, part 3, dated October 1995, which was deposited on 6 December 1995. On the basis of the publishing pattern of this journal, the library would expect to receive copies of the January 1996 issue during March.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17686]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: This answer refers to the Lord Chancellor's Department, Court Service and Public Trust Office. Statistics collected by the Department and the two agencies referred to are aimed at improving decision making, stimulating research and informing debate within government and the wider community. Where statistics broken down by gender are relevant to this purpose, the Department will consider them when deciding or reviewing what to collect. Currently, the Department collects statistics broken down by gender on, for example, public and judicial appointments made by the Lord Chancellor or on his recommendation.

Legal Aid (Franchised Firms)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of franchised firms in each legal aid area at (a) 1 August 1994, (b) at 1 June 1995 and (c) 1 December 1995. [18209]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Franchises are awarded to suppliers' offices rather than firms. The number of franchised offices in each legal aid area as at the dates requested was as follows:

Legal aid area	1 August 1994	1 June 1995	1 December 1996
London	108	117	126
Brighton	53	92	94
Reading	115	141	148
Bristol	93	122	128
Cardiff	46	41	44
Birmingham	27	32	32
Manchester	70	73	91
Newcastle	36	45	44
Leeds	66	70	79
Nottingham	87	102	115
Cambridge	108	124	132
Chester	37	42	49
Liverpool	40	44	58

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the number of sole practitioner firms holding a franchise at 1 November 1995 in each of the legal aid areas. [18210]

Mr. Evans: Information on the number of sole practitioner firms holding a franchise is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Isle of Wight (Expenditure)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what was the total expenditure by his Department on (a) staff, (b) services, (c) offices and (d) other categories on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95. [16768]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Lord Chancellor's Department spent the following amounts on the Isle of Wight in 1994–95:

(a) staff £238,241

(b) services £169,764

(c) offices £47,633

(d) other categories.

Some £191,556 of legal aid payments were made through the Crown court on the Isle of Wight. Expenditure from the legal aid fund cannot be identified separately. The Legal Aid Board administers applications and bills regionally and payments to Isle of Wight practitioners could be identified only by scrutinising each bill at the regional office.

In addition, local authority expenditure on magistrates courts on the Isle of Wight was £747,361. The Lord Chancellor's Department pays grants to local authorities at a rate of 80 per cent. of approved expenditure of magistrates courts.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16892]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Civil servants faced with a conflict of interest must declare their interest to senior management so that senior management can determine how best to proceed. This requirement is set out in the Department's personnel management manual. Records of such declarations are kept in written form on the individual's personal file. Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer. I do not intend to establish a central register of officials' interests.

DEFENCE

Equipment Sales (Iraq)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the Iraq desk within the defence sales sector of his Department was closed. [16314]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No assistance has been provided by my Department to British industry to promote sales of defence equipment to Iraq since August 1990. Before that date, any assistance provided would have been consistent with the guidelines in respect of exports to Iran and Iraq.

Training Services (Foreign Governments)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlay his Department's decisions to write off expenditure in respect of training services for foreign Governments; and if he will indicate when and how the policies which informed these decisions have been reported to Parliament. [17784]

Mr. Soames: Assistance with military training takes place mainly in support of wider foreign policy aims, but can also serve defence objectives by promoting stability and military effectiveness in countries where we retain valuable facilities, including for transit or training, or where we have an obligation to assist in the event of a security threat. Assistance of this nature forms part of military task 3.11, as described in paragraph 522 of the 1993 "Statement on the Defence Estimates" and significant activities under this task have been reported in subsequent statements on the defence estimates. On occasion, the MOD agrees to waive the costs of training provided in the furtherance of these objectives. Training costs can also be reduced or waived in the furtherance of some defence sales, but only when it is considered essential for the sale and when matching cost contributions are provided by the commercial firm involved. The total value of receipts forgone in respect of training is reported each year in the appropriation account. In addition, Ministers have from time to time provided information on the value of such waivers in response to questions. I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Byers) of 3 April 1995, Official Report, columns 968–69.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the sums of money (a) written off each year in respect of training services for foreign Governments and (b) waived in respect of training services for foreign military students; if he will distinguish the costs incurred for policy reasons; and if he will list any expenditure written off or waived in respect of the Government of Iraq. [17783]

Mr. Soames: The primary responsibility for funding military assistance lies with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. On occasion, however, where there is a benefit to defence interests, the MOD agrees to waive the costs of training provided to foreign Governments. According to available records, the total of these waivers in the last five years is as follows:

£ million

Year	Total waiver	Waiver for policy reasons
1990–91	4.6	4.1
1991–92	4.6	4.3
1992–93	5.9	4.9
1993–94	5.5	4.3
1994–95	5.2	4.9

Beyond the above costs, there have been no write-offs in respect of training services for foreign Governments.

Details of the assistance provided are confidential between Governments.

There are no records of any expenditure written off or waived during this period in respect of training services to the Government of Iraq.

Seconded Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what guidelines (a) in force now and (b) issued since 1981 prevent company staff seconded to his Department working on memoranda of advice to Ministers on matters affecting the company from which they were seconded; [17797]

(2) what guidelines have been issued since 13 May 1985 preventing access by company staff seconded to Defence Export Sales Organisation to correspondence, memoranda, and other contracts between the Ministry of Defence and their company; and what guidelines exist at the present time. [17795]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Rules governing access to, and possible disclosure of, information apply to all secondees to this Department, not just to those seconded to the Defence Export Sales Organisation. Guidance was issued by the Cabinet Office management and personnel office in 1987 which addressed, inter alia, the conduct of secondees to Government Departments. Secondees were reminded that they were subject to the Official Secrets Acts and were

"to avoid situations that may lead to conflicts of interest."

Attention was drawn to the need to avoid embarrassment either to the parent organisation or to the host Department. These rules remain in force.

The Department's secondment agreement, which applies to all our secondees, requires them to conform to the normal civil service and departmental rules on conduct. These state:

"no officer may engage in any occupation or undertaking which might in any way conflict with the interests of the Ministry of Defence or be inconsistent with his/her position as a public servant".

Where a conflict of interest could arise, the secondee would be expected to declare this possibility to his/her line manager.

On the question of possible disclosure, MOD rules state that material

"which is of a security classified or confidential nature, to which the Secondee has access as a result of his/her work on secondment, (subject to the rights of third parties) may only be copied, disclosed and used solely for the purpose of performing that work. Such information or material may not be disclosed to or copied or used for the benefit of the Company or any of its employees or any other third party, without the prior written consent of the Secretary of State."

Future Large Aircraft

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current position regarding Britain's membership of the future large aircraft project. [17435]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The United Kingdom has taken an active part in discussions on the future large aircraft project since the announcement by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary when Secretary of State for Defence in December 1994 and will be considering with the FLA partner nations the implications of recent French statements on FLA funding.

Bosnia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the discovery by implementation forces of weapons in the neighbourhood of Sarajevo; what evidence has been found of complicity between the Bosnian Government and Iranians detained at the site of the discovery; and if the matter is being referred to the war crimes tribunal. [16294]

Mr. Soames: On 15 February, IFOR raided a building near Fojnica in central Bosnia and seized weapons, ammunition, explosives and bomb-making equipment. Eleven people were arrested at the scene, including three Iranians. IFOR is continuing its investigation into the discovery, which is believed to constitute a violation of the peace agreement that prohibits the presence of foreign forces in Bosnia. The matter does not fall within the mandate of the international criminal tribunal for the former Yugoslavia.

Army Careers Information Offices

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of Army careers information offices in Scotland; which of these are to remain open and for how long; and if he will make a statement. [17480]

Mr. Soames: There are currently 18 Army careers information offices—ACIOs—in Scotland. Five of these are to become armed forces careers offices—AFCOs—during the next calendar year. These AFCOs will be manned and operated on a tri-service basis. A further nine ACIOs will become permanent Army satellite offices and provide support for the AFCOs. Additionally, four offices due for closure will remain open until April 1997. These four offices form part of the Army's recent review of its requirement for ACIOs as referred to in the Official Report, 20 February 1996, column 96. Locations of all the careers offices are shown in the table.

Armed forces careers offices
Aberdeen
Dundee
Edinburgh
Glasgow
Inverness.
Army satellite offices
Bathgate
Dumfries
Dunfermline
Galashiels
Glenrothes
Hamilton
Irvine
Perth
Stirling.
Short-term retained offices
Dumbarton
Elgin
Greenock
Wick.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17679]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Ministry of Defence does not collect statistics from the general public, local authorities and business. Personnel information to assist the Ministry in running its business is compiled from the Ministry's administrative systems and from surveys of the armed forces and civilian personnel. All the data are available by gender, although not always published as such.

Hawk 100 Aircraft

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions (a) he and (b) his Ministers have had over the last five years concerning the sale by British Aerospace to India of Hawk 100 aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [18200]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Indian air force has a requirement for a number of advanced jet trainer aircraft. British Aerospace has offered a variant of the Hawk aircraft to meet that requirement. I discussed this with the Indian authorities during my recent visit. During the last five years, there have been a number of instances when Defence Ministers have had occasion to commend Hawk to the Indians.

Defence Dental Agency

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the creation of the Defence Dental Agency. [18763]

Mr. Soames: The Defence Dental Agency—DDA—will form up on 1 March 1996, when primary dental care currently provided on a single-service basis will be included within a tri-service agency under the control of a chief executive. The headquarters of the DDA will initially be based in London and its training functions will be undertaken at Aldershot and Halton. However, the majority of the agency's personnel will continue to be employed in dental clinics throughout the United Kingdom and overseas. The staff of the agency comprise 864 military and 179 civilian personnel.

Each service will continue to recruit to its own dental branch and to be responsible for issuing appointments and posting orders for personnel of their particular service into, within, and out of the agency after agreement with the chief executive, and for an agreed duration. It is expected that uniformed dental personnel will spend the major part of their career working within the agency.

The aim of the agency is to contribute to the operational effectiveness of the armed forces by achieving and maintaining, in the most cost-effective way, their dental fitness in war, operational situations other than war, and peace.

The chief executive will be afforded the responsibility and flexibility to build upon the professional ability and reputation for excellence of all three service dental branches. This will ensure that the MOD retains the capacity to deploy trained dental staff on military operations, retain close supervision of the dental fitness standards of service personnel, and maximise value for money in the delivery of dental treatment for service personnel in order to maintain their operational readiness during peacetime.

The chief executive has been set the following key targets for the first year of operation:

1. To achieve the number of professional militarily trained personnel required for deployment at the specified readiness to meet medical support plans for the national contingency force based on defence planning assumptions 96.
2. To define and implement tri-service dental fitness for deployment standards, and introduce a system of coding and quantifying outstanding treatment needs by 31 March 1996; and to achieve the agreed dental fitness for deployment performance targets by 31 March 1997.
3. To identify a suitable clinical management information system and implement it at all DDA main locations.
4. To operate an interim accounting system and a revised feeder system in order to produce full-cost accrual-based accounts for the financial year 1996–97 for preliminary audit by the National Audit Office.
5. To achieve the agreed level of dental fitness for the forecast military population and provide treatment for dependants and entitled civilians overseas within budget; and to identify efficiency measures in the course of the financial year 1996–97 to meet a specific efficiency target for the financial year 1997–98.

I have arranged for copies of the agency's framework document to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Medical Supplies Agency

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the creation of the Medical Supplies Agency. [18762]

Mr. Soames: The defence medical supply organisation will become a defence agency of the Ministry of Defence, to be known as the Medical Supplies Agency—MSA—on 1 March 1996. The MSA will include the Army blood supply depot at Aldershot, the defence medical equipment depot at Ludgershall and 16 medical provisioning points located throughout the UK and overseas.

The MSA will remain part of the MOD, but the chief executive will have delegated executive powers to discharge his responsibilities. The agency will employ 65 military and 260 civilian staff. The location of the headquarters of the agency has yet to be confirmed, but will initially be at Ludgershall.

The aim of the agency is to ensure the most cost-effective and timely provision of medical, dental and veterinary material, blood and blood products, technical and logistic support and trained personnel to the UK armed forces in war, operations other than war, and peace.

The chief executive has been set the following key targets for the first year of operation:

1. To build, hold and maintain the agreed number of kits, outfits and associated items of equipment, as defined in endorsed equipment tables.
2. To meet 100 per cent. of operational deployment requirements to time.
3. To achieve efficiency savings of £4 million in the cash budget of the agency whilst maintaining a constant level of output.
4. By April 1997, to have a fully integrated tri-service structure in place.
5. To identify the minimum stock levels necessary for the agency and publish quantifiable stock reduction targets for the financial year 1997–98.
6. To design and implement the initial customer survey so as to establish a quantifiable baseline for measuring customer satisfaction.

7. To implement an accounting system to produce full-cost accruals based accounts for the financial year 1996–97 for preliminary audit by the National Audit Office.

8. Successful implementation of the medical material management information system and production of a statement of requirement for the procurement of systems to meet the agency's MIS needs.

I have arranged for copies of the agency's framework document to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17306]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Astra Holdings

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what were (a) the first and (b) the final dates of the removal of documents from Astra Holdings by Ministry of Defence police in 1990; [17845]

(2) what were (a) the first and (b) the final dates of the lists of documents removed from Astra Holdings by Ministry of Defence police as required by the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. [17800]

Mr. Soames: The first and final dates of the schedules of documents removed by the Ministry of Defence police from Astra Holdings were 13 March 1990 and 22 July 1992 respectively. The first and final dates of the removal of documents from Astra Holdings by Ministry of Defence police in 1990 were 13 March and 7 August 1990 respectively.

Royal Navy Personnel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of state for Defence how many (a) males and (b) females are employed as (i) commissioned officers, by rank, (ii) non-commissioned officers, by rank and (iii) seamen in the Royal Navy. [17947]

Mr. Soames: Details of the rank and gender breakdown of personnel of the naval service is included in a tri-service publication, TSP9, copies of which are placed in the Library of the House.

Army Personnel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) males and (b) females are employed as (i) commissioned officers, by rank, (ii) non-commissioned officers, by rank and (iii) privates in the Army. [17949]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is contained in a tri-service publication TSP9, page 3, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

RAF Personnel

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) males and (b) females are employed as (i) commissioned officers, by rank, (ii) non-commissioned officers, by rank and (iii) airmen in the RAF. [17948]

Mr. Soames: Details of the breakdown of RAF personnel by rank and gender as at 1 January 1996 are included in the latest edition of the tri-service personnel statistics—TSP9—a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary to State for Defence what actions he (a) has taken and (b) plans to take as a result of the recommendations of the Scott report. [16960]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Grand Committee

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the total cost of each of the sittings of the Scottish Grand Committee held in Scotland during this Parliament; and what is the estimated cost of the future sittings in Scotland planned in this parliamentary Session for (a) room hire, (b) accommodation for parliamentary staff, (c) travel for parliamentary staff, (d) equipment transport costs and (e) other costs. [17770]

Mr. Beith: The costs to date of the six meetings of the Scottish Grand Committee held this Session are given in the table. These figures have been produced by a manual clerical check since costings have hitherto not been analysed to individual meetings. It is also the case that these figures are not the final costs as there are still some invoices and claims outstanding. Excluded from these figures are staff overtime, hire of telephone lines and Members' travel. Estimates are not produced in detail for each visit but the forecast for each meeting was expected to be approximately £8,500. The estimate for the seven future meetings planned up until the 8 July is £59,500.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what has been the cost of each meeting of the Scottish Grand Committee in the current Session to date; and what is the estimated cost of each of those planned for the remainder of the Session. [12960]

Mr. Beith [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1996, c. 337–38]: I am now able to give the hon. Member, in the table, the following information about the six meetings of the Scottish Grand Committee held so far this Session. These figures have been produced by a manual–clerical check as costings have not hitherto been analysed to individual meetings. It is also the case that these figures are not the final costs as there are still some invoices and claims outstanding. Excluded from these figures are staff overtime, hire of telephone lines and Members' travel. Estimates are not produced in detail for each visit but the forecast for each meeting was expected to be approximately £8,500. The estimate for the seven future meetings planned up until the 8 July is £59,500.

HEALTH

Medium Secure Units

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average length of stay in medium secure units; and if length of stay is limited. [16787]

Mr. Bowis: The length of time patients spend in medium secure units is determined by their clinical needs. We do not have information centrally about an average for the length of stay.

Psychiatric Hospital Beds

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers of psychiatric hospital beds available for (a) short-stay and (b) long-stay patients between 1987 and 1995, together with a definition of short and long-stay patients. [16782]

Mr. Bowis: The number of available beds in hospital and residential units for mentally ill people is shown in the table.

Available beds and staffed residential places for mentally ill people

1994–95	4,747	5,192	12,245	24,190	41,827	88,201

In addition, there are about 1,600 places in the three special hospitals at Ashworth, Broadmoor and Rampton.

Notes:
Nursing care places in residential care homes which are registered for both residential and nursing care are included in the column containing nursing homes.

Accident and Emergency Units, Durham

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the cost of upgrading the accident and emergency department in Dryburn hospital, Durham; and how many extra full-time staff will be employed there; [17215]

(2) how much will be saved as a result of the closure of the accident and emergency department at Shotley Bridge hospital, Durham. [17216]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for North Durham acute hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the trust chairman, Mr. C. P. Douglas, for details.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the infant mortality rates in (a) East London/City, (b) Redbridge and Waltham Forest and (c) Kingston and Richmond; and what factors underlie the disparities between these figures; [17428]

(2) what assessment he has made of the factors underlying significant variations in infant mortality rates in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) London. [17427]

Mr. Horam: The infant mortality rates requested are as shown in the table:

Infant mortality rates per 1,000 live births 1994

Location	Rate per 1,000 live births
East London and The City Health Authority	8.8
Redbridge and Waltham Forest Health Authority	6.7
Kingston and Richmond Health Authority	3.1

The infant mortality rate for England and Wales as a whole has halved over the last 15 years and is now at the lowest level ever achieved. All parts of the country have benefited from this reduction, but variations in infant mortality, which have been apparent since the 1950s, have persisted. Last October, we asked health authorities to act on the recommendation of a report commissioned by the Chief Medical Officer, "Variations in Health: What can the Department of Health and the National Health Service do?", copies of which are available in the Library. We have also allocated £2.4 million in 1996 for research into the causes of variations in health and the needs of particularly vulnerable groups of the population.

Lung Cancer

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average annual cost to the NHS for treating all people suffering from (a) lung cancer and (b) mesothelioma over the last five years; [17221]

(2) what is the current average cost to the NHS for treating each person suffering from (a) lung cancer and (b) mesothelioma over the course of their illness. [17220]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Construction Skills Certification Scheme

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to ensure that personnel on its construction sites have construction skills certification scheme accreditation. [17438]

Mr. Horam: There are no current plans to issue guidance about the construction skills certification scheme, which is a voluntary register operated by the construction industry training board.

Aging Study

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was his Department's input into the Medical Research Council's cognitive function and aging study; and if he will make a statement. [17512]

Mr. Malone: The cognitive function and aging study is a large, multi-centre study of the prevalence, incidence and natural history of declining cognitive function and dementia in old age. The Department has contributed £100,000 per year over seven years. In addition to the financial support, the Department has a presence on the project's steering group.

NHS Patients (Compensation)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums were paid out by the national health service to patients or their relatives as compensation, in each of the last five years for which information is available. [17714]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not separately identifiable from central returns.

Dental Services

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters he received from the general public during 1995 on difficulties in obtaining treatment from NHS dentists. [17656]

Mr. Malone: During 1995 the Department of Health received some 243 letters from members of the public which were concerned with difficulties in gaining access to national health service dentists.

Paediatric Cardiac Operators, Bristol

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlay his Department's decision to advise the United Bristol Healthcare NHS trust that an arterial switch operation scheduled to be performed at the Bristol royal infirmary on 12 January 1995 should not take place as planned. [17716]

Mr. Horam: My Department did not advise that the operation should not take place. It would not be appropriate for my Department to become involved in matters of clinical judgment. Concern was expressed to my Department about the advisability of operating in view of concerns expressed previously by some members of staff of the Bristol royal infirmary about the performance of complex paediatric open heart operations including the "switch". The United Bristol Healthcare NHS trust was informed about the expressions of concern and asked to ensure that the concerns were taken into account when deciding whether the operation should proceed.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received from Professor G. Angelini since 1990 about the performance of neo-natal arterial switch operations at Bristol royal infirmary. [17715]

Mr. Horam: Professor Angelini expressed concern in the summer of 1994 about the results of an audit of performance of complex paediatric cardiac procedures including the neo-natal switch operation. These concerns were communicated to the United Bristol Healthcare NHS trust by my Department.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has received during the last five years from the supra-regional services advisory group about the performance of paediatric cardiac operations at Bristol royal infirmary. [17713]

Mr. Horam: None.

Smokers

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of (a) men and (b) women in the United Kingdom aged 15 to 20 years smoke; and if he will make a statement. [17522]

Mr. Horam: Information is not readily available in the form requested, but it is estimated that, among persons aged 16 to 20 in the United Kingdom, 31 per cent. of men and 27 per cent. of women smoke cigarettes.

Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue guidance to social services departments regarding the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of this notice relative to the date of the Act coming into force. [17547]

Mr. Bowis: Policy and practice guidance to accompany the Act was distributed to local health authorities on 28 February 1996, copies of which will be placed in the Library. Draft versions were issued on 10 October 1995—some six months before the Act comes into force.

Carers

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of carers in the United Kingdom; and how many are providing care for 20 hours or more each week. [17567]

Mr. Bowis: It is estimated that the number of carers in the United Kingdom in 1990 was 6.8 million, of whom 1.5 million provide care for more than 20 hours each week.

Postgraduate Deans

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 601, how many withdrawals of approval for post have been made by postgraduate deans in each of the last five years. [17941]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Waiting List Initiative

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reports he has received and what evidence he has assessed that the waiting list initiative has led to longer waits for urgent cases. [18061]

Mr. Horam: We have no evidence that the waiting list initiative has led to longer waits for urgent cases. Half of all admissions to hospital are immediate. Of those patients who go on to a waiting list, those who need urgent treatment are given priority. Decisions on when to admit patients are for doctors and must be based on their assessment of patients' clinical need.

Hospital Closures, Wandsworth

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have closed since 1978 in the London borough of Wandsworth. [16062]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Harry Cowd, chairman of Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth health authority, for details of hospital closures in the area.

Accident and Emergency Provisions, Liverpool and Sefton

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of accident and emergency provision in the Liverpool and South Sefton health authority areas; and what plans he has to provide additional resources for the provision of more intensive care beds. [16291]

Mr. Horam: These are matters for the Liverpool and Sefton health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. H. Tod and Mr. F. R. Ludlow, chairmen of Liverpool and Sefton health authorities respectively, for details.

Adoption

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact of adoption on inheritance rights. [17388]

Mr. Bowis: Under the Adoption Act 1976, an adopted child's links with his birth family are severed and he is treated as the legitimate child of the adopter. He is therefore entitled to inherit only from the adoptive parent and adoptive family. An adopted person does not have legal entitlement to inherit from a birth parent unless his interest has been vested before the adoption order is made. Where interest is only contingent, that interest will be lost on adoption. The proposed Adoption Bill will include a provision to give the court discretion to allow an adopted child to retain a contingent interest—or part of it—in his birth family's property after adoption.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the findings of the Government's White Paper published in 1992 recommending changes to the existing adoption law. [17390]

Mr. Bowis: Following publication of the White Paper "Adoption: The Future" in November 1993, a draft Bill is being prepared for consultation and will be available shortly.

Meningitis

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of meningitis have been confirmed over the past six months; how many patients have died; and what were the figures for the same period in 1994–95 in (a) the Tees health authority area and (b) England and Wales. [17590]

Mr. Horam: Provisional data on notified cases of meningitis and meningococcal disease in Cleveland—and its component authorities—for the last six-month period of 1995 and the corresponding period in 1994 are shown in the tables. Notifications can be made on clinical suspicion alone and it is likely that some notified cases will not have been laboratory confirmed.

The incidence of meningococcal infection usually increases during the winter. In 1995, the rise in cases appears to have come earlier than usual, in December. Though this partly explains the higher 1995 figures for the July to December period, we did see more cases than in 1994 and also an increase in the proportion of the less common group C strain. Nevertheless, the total number of cases and types of meningitis seen in 1995 is not out of line with that experienced in the recent past.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17682]

Mr. Horam: Gender specific statistical information is already collected by the Department where justified by the purposes the data will serve and where the collation of the data does not place an undue burden on data providers. The coverage and level of detail of all centrally held statistics, including gender-related information, is subject to regular review in consultation with the providers and users of the data.

Cancer Services, Bristol

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about cancer services at the Bristol oncology centre. [17897]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for Avon health commission and the United Bristol healthcare NHS trust. I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 28 February, Official Report, at columns 849–57.

Disabled People (Care Services)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has now considered the implications for local authorities of the High Court's decision in relation to Gloucestershire county council's refusal to restore care services to over 1,000 disabled people in the county; and if he plans to issue further guidance to local authorities on the effect of section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 following the High Court's decision. [17917]

Mr. Bowis: I have no current plans to issue further guidance on this matter.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate his Department has made of the amount of money which will be reclaimed under the new rules for prescription charges in respect of men aged between 60 and 65; [16945]

(2) how many pensioners have claimed refunds of prescription charges under the new rules affecting men aged between 60 and 65 years. [16944]

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what total repayments have been made by the prescription claims processing unit to men aged 60 to 64 years since 20 October 1995; [17252]

(2) what percentage of applications received by the prescription claims processing unit have been processed to the latest available date; [17254]

(3) how many applications for refunds of NHS prescriptions charges have been lodged by men aged 60 to 64 years since 20 July 1995; and what percentage of those eligible this represents. [17253]

Mr. Malone: We do not hold figures on the number of men aged 60 to 65 who have paid prescription charges prior to the European Court of Justice ruling. Following our invitation to register a claim we have issued over 187,000 claim forms to men in the United Kingdom. At the close of business on 23 February 132,000—70 per cent.—had been returned.

To date the prescription claims processing unit has authorised payments totalling £2.6 million to 83,000 —63 per cent.—men. At this stage it is not possible to forecast accurately the total cost of likely refunds but they are not expected to exceed £6 million. This does not include the cost of prepayment certificates refunded locally by family health services authorities. Administration costs will be additional.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sporting Events (Broadcasting)

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she was informed of the Sky TV pay-as-you-view proposal for selected future sporting events prior to its announcement. [17745]

Mr. Sproat: This is a commercial matter between BSKyB and the right holder involved. My Department was not consulted.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those contracts her Department currently holds with EDS Ltd. indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17441]

Mr. Sproat: My Department has no contracts with EDS.

National Lottery

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what have been the (a) administration and (b) wages costs for each national lottery funding distribution body in each month since its establishment. [15063]

Mr. Sproat: The tables show the lottery administration costs and wages met for 13 months from 1 January 1995. The majority of distributors were given approval to draw funds from the national lottery distribution fund from this date.

1. The NHMF, the art councils and the sports councils were established to perform other activities prior to the national lottery. The figures shown for administration and wages, represent the charge to lottery funds of all full-time lottery staff, plus a proportion of the costs of other staff in the organisations, who spend only part of their time working on lottery activities.
2. Distributors began developing systems to carry out lottery duties in the autumn of 1994. Costs associated with this development were met from other sources (grant-in-aid) and recharged against lottery funds in the first few months of 1995.
[1] Administration costs and wages of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, the Sports Council for Wales and the Sports Council for Northern Ireland are initially met by the main council and recharged to the lottery at a later date. This does not always take place on a monthly basis.
[2] Administration and wages costs of the Scottish Sports Council lottery unit for January, February and March 1995 were incurred by the main council on behalf of the lottery unit and recharged to the lottery in total, in March.
[3] Administration costs of the Arts Council of England's lottery unit are shown in total for January, February and March 1995.

1. The NHMF, the art councils and the sports councils were established to perform other activities prior to the national lottery. The figures shown for administration and wages, represent the charge to lottery funds of all full-time lottery staff, plus a proportion of the costs of other staff in the organisations, who spend only part of their time working on lottery activities.
2. Distributors began developing systems to carry out lottery duties in the autumn of 1994. Costs associated with this development were met from other sources (grant-in-aid) and recharged against lottery funds in the first few months of 1995.
[1] Administration costs and wages of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, the Sports Council for Wales and the Sports Council for Northern Ireland are initially met by the main council and recharged to the lottery at a later date. This does not always take place on a monthly basis.
[2] The Sports Council's salary costs for January 1995 include the costs of the council's planning team for the period to 31 December 1994, which were later recharged by the council to the lottery unit.
[3] Administration and wages costs of the Scottish Sports Council lottery unit for January, February and March 1995 were incurred by the main council on behalf of the lottery unit and recharged to the lottery in total, in March.
[4] Administration costs of the Arts Council of England's lottery unit are shown in total for January, February and March 1995.
[5] Figures not available.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will publish a list of those agencies charged with distributing national lottery funding detailing the size of budget, the number of staff and the remuneration of each agency head for the year (a) before and (b) after their duties in respect of the lottery were allocated. [15096]

Mr. Sproat: The table shows expected administration costs to be incurred by each of the 11 lottery distributors for the 12 months ending 31 March 1996, the number of staff required by those bodies for lottery duties and the salaries of the most senior officials of each body for 1994–95 and 1995–96.

[1] The NHMF appointed a new director in December 1995.
[2] The post of chief executive of the Millennium Commission was filled on a temporary basis until 1 March 1995.
[3] The figures for staff exclude any allowance for those officers of the NHMF, the arts councils and the sports councils who, though not assigned lottery staff, do spent a proportion of their time on lottery distribution activities.
[4] With the exception of the National Lottery Charities Board and the Millennium Commission, salaries of chief executives are not fully charged against lottery funds.
[5] The NHMF now has a staffing complement of 44 for its lottery distribution activities, the additional posts are expected to be filled in the near future.
[6] The salary of the chief executive of the Scottish Arts Council is currently under review.
[7] The staff complement of the NLCB has been agreed at 148. Some 30 temporary staff are also currently employed.
[8] The chief executives of the NLCB and the Millennium Commission are also paid an allowance of 15 per cent. of their salaries, with which to make their own pension provisions.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has received concerning the establishment of free-standing lottery distribution bodies for Wales and Scotland; and if she will make a statement. [16411]

Mr. Sproat: I have received no such representations.

English Heritage Sites (Cleaning Contracts)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many British companies tendered for the contract to clean British Heritage sites; [15891]

(2) what criteria were used in deciding which company should be awarded the contract for cleaning British Heritage sites; [15892]

(3) what is her Department's policy in respect of awarding contracts to foreign companies; [15894]

(4) to what extent the decision to award the contract to clean British Heritage sites to a French company was based on price considerations. [15890]

Mr. Sproat: The hon. Member's questions appear to refer to the sale by English Heritage of its direct labour conservation and maintenance organisation, Historic Property Restoration—HPR. The proposal to privatise HPR was set out in the forward strategy published by English Heritage in 1992. This proposal to privatise was prompted by changes in the geographic pattern of HPR's workload. Direct employment cannot provide the required flexibility. In accordance with our obligations as a member of the European Union, the sale of HPR was advertised in the Official Journal of the European Communities. Five shortlisted companies were invited to tender. Only two did so—one British owned, one French owned. The tender submitted by the British-owned company was significantly less financially favourable than the tender from the French-owned company.

HPR has a work force skilled in building conservation which, in the private sector, will be able to bid for work from which it is statutorily excluded as a part of English Heritage. This will give the work force improved employment prospects. It is the intention to transfer staff under Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 provisions.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the officials in her Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if she will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16893]

Mr. Sproat: Officials in this Department faced with a conflict of interest must declare their interest to senior management so that senior management can determine how best to proceed. This requirement is set out in departmental rules. Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and the Department. There are currently no plans to establish a central register of officials' interests for this Department.

Royal Parks

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will publish figures for planned public expenditure on (a) all the royal parks and (b) Greenwich park for the years 1995–96 to 1998–99 on the same basis as those published in (i) table 1 on page 60 and (ii) table 2 on page 61 of the report of the royal parks review group on Greenwich park, presented in March 1995. [16391]

Mr. Sproat: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Royal Parks under its chief executive, Mr. David Welch. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Welch to Mr. Nick Raynsford, dated 29 February 1996:

I have been asked by Iain Sproat, Minister of State for National Heritage, to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State to publish figures for planned expenditure on all the Royal Parks and on Greenwich Park because these are the areas for which I am responsible.

I attach tables showing planned total expenditure in all the Royal Parks and in Greenwich until 1998/99. These figures are based on the Agency's 1995 Corporate Plan as we have not finalised our Plan for the period 1996–99.

Patents (British Library)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the present location of original documents held by the British library concerning (a) Rathbone and Burges' patent AD 1617 No. 1, (b) Jeremy Buck's patent of 1651 for the smelting of iron with coal, (c) Il Codice Atlantico by Leonardo da Vinci and (d) Aeronautica Illustrata by C. J. Norman. [17157]

Mr. Sproat: A copy of Rathbone and Burges' patent AD 1617 No. 1 is held by the British library and may be consulted at the science reference and information service's reading room at 25 Southampton buildings, London WC2A 1AW. The library does not hold a copy of Jeremy Buck's patent of 1651 for the smelting of iron with coal. I understand that official copies of most letters patent were enrolled on the Chancery patent rolls which are held by the Public Record Office. Information about such copies can be obtained from the Keeper of Public Records at the Public Record Office, Chancery lane, London WC2A 1LR. I understand that the Codex Atlanticus is held by the Ambrosian library in Milan. A copy of the Aeronautica Illustrata by C. J. Norman is held by the British library's science reference and information service and may be consulted at the library's reading room at 9 Kean street, London WC2B 4AT.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps her Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17694]

Mr. Sproat: Statistics concerning staff employed in my Department are normally based on pay and personnel records which include information on gender. Statistical information about personnel can therefore usually be broken down by gender.

Party Political Broadcasts

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the current rules which permit political parties to have an entitlement to broadcasting time on television on the basis of the numbers of candidates fielded; what plans he has to review the procedures; and what parliamentary procedures would be needed to implement these proposals. [17094]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Decisions about the provision of airtime for party election broadcasts are matters for the BBC, the Independent Television Commission and the Radio Authority. By convention, proposals are put to the major political parties represented at Westminster with a view to reaching consensus.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

13. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise at the next meeting of the Agriculture Council the size of the CAP budget for 1996. [16109]

Mr. Baldry: The CAP budget situation forms part of the Council's current considerations of the 1996–97 price fixing proposals.

15. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made on making the operation of the common agricultural policy more effective and more efficient. [16111]

Mr. Baldry: The European Commission has now accepted our view that the CAP must change. But neither it nor the majority of member states are yet convinced of the need for the fundamental reform for which we are pressing.

Live Animal Transport

14. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the transport of live animals; and if he will make a statement. [16110]

Mrs. Browning: We are conducting an extensive consultation on implementation of the EU rules on the welfare of animals in transit. The first stage of that is complete—we have had a high level of positive and proactive responses. We will be consulting widely again before any final decisions are taken.

27. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the welfare of animals during export. [16124]

Mr. Hall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the welfare of farm animals during export. [16120]

Mrs. Browning: We are consulting extensively on implementation of the EU rules on the welfare of animals in transit. The first stage is complete—we are grateful for the positive and proactive responses of those affected. We shall consult further before putting forward any proposals for legislation.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has (a) to introduce new and (b) to revise existing regulations governing the transport of domestic animals to (i) EU and (ii) other overseas destinations. [17042]

Mrs. Browning: We are currently consulting extensively on implementation in this country of new EU rules on the transport of animals. The details of these provisions are aimed primarily at farmed livestock but the general principles of safeguarding the welfare of animals in transit cover other animals as well. As part of the exercise we intend, as set out in our October 1995 consultation document, to consolidate existing legislation on animal welfare in transport into one instrument. Further consultation will take place before proposals for legislation are put forward.

Calves

16. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has recently received concerning the welfare of calves. [16112]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that my right hon. Friend gave earlier to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. Clapham).

Milk Marque

17. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has recently received about the operation of Milk Marque. [16113]

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend and I continue to receive representations about Milk Marque's operating practices. Any complaints about these practices are a matter for the competition authorities.

Horticultural Imports

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet representatives of the horticultural industry to discuss the price of imports from eastern Europe. [16115]

Mr. Boswell: I frequently meet representatives of the horticulture industry. We discuss a variety of issues of concern to them including, where appropriate, imports from central and eastern Europe.

Integrated Administration and Control System

19. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made as to parity of enforcement of IACS payment by EU countries. [16116]

Mr. Baldry: All EU member states are required to implement IACS in accordance with the detailed rules laid down in Commission regulation 3887/92. Commission officials regularly visit all member states to check the way in which they operate the system. Full details of penalties applied are not available but information received suggests that the proportion of penalties applied in the UK is generally similar to those found in other member states.

Fisheries Council

20. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the decisions made at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers in December 1995. [16117]

21. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the decisions made at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers in December 1995. [16118]

22. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the decisions made at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers in December 1995. [16119]

Mr. Baldry: I received a wide range of representations from Members of Parliament and members of the public both before and after the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 21 and 22 December 1995.

Soya Milk

24. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on Government policies in respect of the labelling of soya milk. [16121]

Mrs. Browning: Since the adoption in 1987 of Community legislation prohibiting the use of dairy terms on non-dairy products, the Government have pressed the European Commission, and other member states, to allow the continued use of the term "soya milk" in the UK.

However, we have now exhausted all possibilities for securing a change in the rules and have been obliged to take the action necessary to comply with the Community legislation.

I am in contact with the industry and enforcement authorities about changing the name of the product.

Peat (Container Plants)

25. Mrs Golding: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to find an alternative to peat for use in raising container plants. [16122]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry funds strategic research and development looking at the development of alternatives to peat as a growing medium. I will be pleased to write to the hon. Member with further details.

Conservation

26. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department is taking to improve environmental management and wildlife conservation on agricultural land. [16123]

Mr. Boswell: Over the past two years the Ministry has greatly expanded the range of incentives available to promote environmental management and wildlife conservation on farmland. We have launched six new environmentally sensitive areas, making 22 in total covering 10 per cent. of agricultural land in England, and 22 new nitrate sensitive areas, making 32 in all.

We have also introduced several entirely new schemes addressing major environmental priorities such as creating valuable wildlife habitats on farmland, promoting organic farming and improving the condition of heather moorland. In addition, we have announced plans for the future expansion and development of the countryside stewardship scheme when it transfers from the Countryside Commission to MAFF in April at the end of its pilot period. Taken together, these measures represent a substantial commitment to conserving the countryside.

Common Fisheries Policy

28. Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made towards renegotiating the common fisheries policy. [16126]

Mr. Baldry: The Government are pursuing a series of initiatives to achieve improvements in the way that the common fisheries policy operates.

Dogs (Export Licences)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences were issued for the export of dogs from the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [17041]

Mrs. Browning: Exports of dogs are not subject to licensing. Precise figures for dog exports from the United Kingdom are not available since information is not held centrally, but it is estimated that 6,200 official export health certificates relating to approximately 9,600 dogs were issued during 1995. Figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Animal Welfare Directive

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress the Government have made on implementing the European directive on animal welfare. [16751]

Mrs. Browning: We are consulting extensively on implementation in this country of the new EU rules on the protection of animals during transport. The first stage of consultation is complete, and we shall be consulting further on our proposals for legislation, taking account of the comments we have received. The EU rules have to be implemented in the member states by 31 December 1996.

Veal Crates

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to persuade the European Commission to phase out veal crates earlier than the time scale provisionally set. [16833]

Mrs. Browning: The Commission presented its proposals for phasing out the close confinement veal crate to the Council of Agriculture Ministers earlier this week. We made it clear in the preliminary discussions that the 12-year lead-in period is too long and we will continue to press hard for an early end to the close confinement veal crate and its associated dietary regime throughout Europe.

Zoonoses Diseases

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which other EU member states have implemented directive 92/117 for the harmonisation of rules governing the prevention of specified zoonoses diseases. [17182]

Mrs. Browning: Article 8 of directive 92/117 requires member states to submit to the Commission details of the measures they are taking to implement the requirements of the directive. We believe nine member states have so far submitted plans, but only Denmark's plan has been accepted as being fully compatible with the objectives of the directive while the others, including the United Kingdom's, have been rejected.

The Commission's main objection to the United Kingdom's measures is our policy of offering alternatives to slaughter in respect of parent broiler breeder flocks found on investigation to be infected with salmonella enteritidis or salmonella typhimurium.

Farm Woodland Premium Scheme

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to simplify the procedure involved in the consideration of grants sought under the farm woodland premium scheme. [17413]

Mr. Boswell: The farm woodland premium scheme is currently being reviewed to enable decisions to be taken about its future operation after 31 March 1997. The simplification of application procedures is one of the issues being addressed. We expect to announce the outcome of the review this summer.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the cost of grants under the farm woodland premium scheme in each of the last seven years; and how, in each year, the sums paid out compared with the amounts budgeted. [17414]

Mr. Boswell: The farm woodland premium scheme was launched on 1 April 1992. The first annual payments were not made until October 1993. Expenditure details for England are as follows:

£000

Year	Actual expenditure	PES provision
1993–94	645	1,022
1994–95	1,362	2,713
1995–96	[1]1,943	4,816

[1] Estimate.

Licensed Abattoirs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licensed abattoirs there were in (a) Wales, (b) England, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland at the end of 1995; and if he will make a statement. [17554]

Mrs. Browning: In respect of (a), (b) and (c) the lists set out the number of slaughterhouses licensed at the end of 1995 under (i) the Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995 and (ii) the Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995:

(i) The Fresh Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995

Wales: 36

England: 402

Scotland: 48

(ii) The Poultry Meat, Farmed Game Bird Meat and Rabbit Meat (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations 1995

Wales: 11

England: 144

Scotland: 8

In respect of (d) I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, who is responsible for the licensing of slaughterhouses in Northern Ireland.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17678]

Mr. Boswell: Statistics concerning staff employed in the Department are normally based on pay and personnel records which include information on gender. Statistical information about personnel can therefore usually be broken down by gender.

The Department also collects the following information broken down by gender:

(i) employment on agricultural holdings

(ii) earnings and hours on agricultural holdings

(iii) food consumption and expenditure.

Rabies

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will commission an independent study and full economic audit of all the available options for managing the risk of rabies to Great Britain. [14786]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 14 February 1996]: The Government gave this matter careful consideration following recommendations made by the Agriculture Select Committee in its report in late 1994 for certain changes to the current quarantine arrangements. Ministers also receive regular advice from officials on all aspects of rabies control. I therefore see no need to commission a further study at this time.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive from his Chief Veterinary Officer the new rabies risk assessment; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [14787]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 14 February 1996]: Ministers receive regular advice from officials on all aspects of rabies control including the risk of introduction of the disease. However, advice from officials to Ministers is confidential and is not normally divulged.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will ensure that veterinary surgeons have immediate unrestricted access to the inactivated rabies vaccines already approved by his Department for use of in animals in their care. [14788]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 14 February 1996]: No. The British isles is an internationally recognised rabies-free zone and the use of rabies vaccine for any animals other than those going for export or those going into quarantine would be unnecessary and entirely inappropriate.

Food and Drink Industry

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he intends to help improve export opportunities for the United Kingdom's food and drink industry. [16125]

Mrs. Browning: We continue, through Food from Britain, to provide active support, practical help and advice, to an increasing number of companies. Its recently opened new representative office in Copenhagen will help our exporters to reach even wider markets.

SCOTLAND

District Court Trials

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total number of trials in the district courts during 1995; [16734]

(2) what was the total number of adjournments of trials in the district courts and the reason for these adjournments during 1995; and whether they were at the instance of the prosecution or the defence. [16735]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the chief executive of the Scottish Court Service on 27 February 1996, Official Report, column 531.

Lord Advocate

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Bills the Lord Advocate has introduced into the House of Lords in each of the past five years; and on what dates they were introduced. [16736]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

1991:

None.

1992:

None.

1993:

Crofters (Scotland) Bill (25 May 1993)

Scottish Land Court Bill (25 May 1993)

Local Government (Wales) Bill (30 November 1993).

1994:

Value Added Tax Bill (16 May 1994)

(Lord Advocate Rodger on behalf of the Lord Chancellor)

Criminal Justice (Scotland) Bill (17 November 1994)

(Lord Advocate Rodger on behalf of the Lord Fraser of Carmyllie).

1995:

Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Bill (8 June 1995)

Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Bill (8 June 1995)

Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Bill (8 June 1995)

Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions)(Scotland) Bill (8 June 1995).

My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is currently a spokesman for legal affairs, Scotland, Home Office and Wales in the House of Lords and would normally be involved in later stages of Bills rather than on introduction.

Housing

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many private sector leasing arrangements were established in the last year with local authorities in Argyll and Bute for the purpose of housing people on housing benefit and income support; and if he will make a statement. [17104]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. However, we understand from Argyll and Bute district council that since 1 April 1995 it has accommodated 643 people in receipt of income support and housing benefit in privately leased accommodation in the district.

Police

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the annual budget for each of the Scottish police constabularies for each of the last five years. [17430]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The budget estimates provided to the Scottish Office by local authorities are set out in the table.

Confiscation Unit

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff there are in the confiscation unit of the Scottish Prosecution Service. [17144]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no dedicated confiscation unit in the Scottish Prosecution Service. Confiscation proceedings are dealt with as part of the duties of the fraud and specialist services unit at the Crown Office. Each of the four legal staff in that unit carry, as part of their workload, confiscation cases. The full resources of the procurator fiscal service are available to assist in necessary investigation in such cases.

Water and Sewerage (Grants)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants he has made since April 1995 to reduce or stabilise water and sewerage bills in Scotland; what is the estimated annual cost of such grants; and if he will make a statement on the revision for such grants. [17510]

Mr. Kynoch: No such grants have been made by my right hon. Friend since April 1995. For the financial year 1996–97, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 29 November 1995 to my right hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), Official Report, column 704.

Eye Tests

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what payments his Department made to optometrists in Scotland in respect of free or subsidised eye tests in 1978–79 and in the most recent year for which figures are available. [17517]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sight tests may be carried out by ophthalmic opticians—optometrists—or ophthalmic medical practitioners. From April 1989 eligibility to NHS sight tests was restricted to certain groups of the population. The information requested is set out in the table.

Scotland: NHS sight test fees paid to ophthalmic opticians and ophthalmic medical practitioners

[3] Since June 1990 practitioners may claim a visit fee when they carry out a sight test at a patient's home.

Companies (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of applications that have been made by companies for financial assistance, (b) the number approved, (c) the total financial value of the approved applications and (d) the average time taken to process and approve these applications in the last three years for which figures are available for (i) the Scottish Development Agency and (ii) the Highlands and Islands development board. [16979]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands development board were replaced by, respectively, Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise on 1 April 1991. As the information requested concerns the operational activities of these organisations, I have asked their chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Farm Woodland Premium Scheme

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will revise the regulatory arrangements to make farmers who are not engaged in full-time agricultural activity or farmers wishing to retire to take up support under the farm woodland premium scheme. [17212]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Under the existing statutory rules, entry to the farm woodland premium scheme is not restricted to full-time farmers, although retired farmers are ineligible. The scheme is currently being reviewed to enable decisions to be taken about its future operation after 31 March 1997. The eligibility rules are among the various issues under consideration. It is too early to predict the outcome of the review but an announcement is expected during the summer.

Forestry

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he has undertaken of schemes for the encouragement of forestry in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Ireland; and what has been the contribution made to the increase in forestry in Ireland from EC funds. [17415]

Mr. Kynoch: The Forestry Commission undertook a comprehensive review of the incentives for forestry investment in Britain in 1994. The EC reimburses up to 75 per cent. of the cost of planting grants in objective 1 areas. My right hon. Friend, however, has no responsibility for forestry in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the net change in afforested areas in (a) England and Ireland and (b) Scotland in each of the last 10 years. [17416]

Mr. Kynoch: The areas afforested in England and Scotland in each of the last 10 years are as follows. My right hon. Friend, however, has no responsibility for forestry in the Republic of Ireland. The area of woodland converted to other land uses each year is not recorded.

Thousands hectares

	England	Scotland

1993	5.3	12.1
1994	6.2	10.5
1995	5.1	13.4

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by what proportion the areas devoted to forestry has changed in (a) the United Kingdom as a whole, (b) Northern Ireland (c) in Ireland over the last 10 years. [17417]

Mr. Kynoch: The area devoted to forestry in the United Kingdom has increased by 10 per cent. in the last 10 years. My right hon. Friend, however, has no responsibility for forestry in Northern Ireland or the Republic of Ireland.

Prison Service

Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number employed within the Scottish Prison Service; if he will provide a breakdown (a) for (i) uniformed and (ii) civilian employees and (b) for each institution, in each of the last five years. [17837]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 29 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about the total number employed within the Scottish Prison Service with a breakdown (a) for (i) uniformed and (ii) civilian employees and (b) for each institution in each of the last five years.

I attach a table which gives the information which I think you are seeking. It is in 2 parts. First, the number of uniformed and civilian staff on 31 March each year from 1991 to 1995. In this table, civilian staff means civilian instructors in the SPS workshops, and civilian staff in typing grades in prisons, and in some prison maintenance jobs, as well as administrative staff in the Scottish Prison Service Headquarters. Uniformed staff include all prison officers, senior officers and principal officers, as well as prison governors (although the latter do not in fact wear a uniform).

On 1 April 1995, however, the Scottish Prison Service moved to a New Staffing Structure, which abolished the previous grades and incorporated the HQ staff into the SPS Staffing Structure. In addition, a number of posts which were previously filled by uniformed staff are now filled by civilian staff, such as professional nurses or administrative staff in offices or maintenance staff dealing with the prison estate. The most recent figures available as at 1 February 1996 are in Table 2. These distinguish between operational management and staff, and other staff.

I hope this provides the information which you are seeking.

Ms Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total expenditure on the Scottish Prison Service and the component allocated to private security firms; and if he will provide a breakdown by institution in each of the last five years. [17836]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Ms Roseanna Cunningham, dated 29 February 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about the total expenditure on the Scottish Prison Service and the component allocated to private security firms with a breakdown by institution in the last five years.

The total expenditure on the Scottish Prison Service in the last five years, as shown in the Annual Reports is listed below, no part of which was allocated to private security firms.

Financial year	Total expenditure (£000)
1990–91	125,908
1991–92	136,763
1992–93	150,027
1993–94	154,343
1994–95	164,283

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17689]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The role of the statistical services in the Scottish Office is to collect and analyse statistics on most aspects of Scottish life. Where relevant, this involves the collection and publication of statistics broken down by gender. As a result, gender is distinguished in a wide range of statistical information handled by the Department.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about sheriffdom and sheriff court district boundaries following reorganisation of local government. [18601]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My Department issued a consultation document on 29 December 1995, copies of which have been placed in the Library. As a result of the responses to the consultation paper, I propose to make only minor adjustments to five sheriff court district boundaries as described. As a consequence of these changes, there would be minor changes to the boundaries of the sheriffdoms of Glasgow and Strathkelvin and South Strathclyde, Dumfries and Galloway respectively. My proposals will be brought before the House for approval shortly.

Sheriff Court District	Proposed Changes
Airdrie	Airdrie will retain its current jurisdiction with the addition of part of Strathclyde Electoral Division 46 (Chryston)
Arbroath	Arbroath will retain its current jurisdiction and absorb Tayside Electoral Division 30 (Monifieth)
Forfar	Forfar will retain its current jurisdiction and assume responsibility for that part of Tayside Electoral Division 31 (Sidlaw) which is now contained within the Angus Council district.

Sheriff Court District	Proposed Changes
Glasgow	The only part of Strathkelvin which is not to be absorbed into the new East Dunbartonshire Council is part of Strathclyde Electoral Division 46 (Chryston). This will be transferred from Glasgow to Airdrie Sheriff Court district.
Perth	Perth will retain its current jurisdiction with the addition of part of Tayside Electoral Division 31 (Sidlaw).

Ministry of Defence Joint Working Group

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer 5 February, Official Report, column 90, how many of the meetings of the Ministry of Defence joint working group have been attended by his Department's officials, and what level of officials and which section. [17408]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 27 February 1996]: Scottish Office officials have attended all three meetings of the Ministry of Defence joint working group held to date. One meeting was attended by an official at grade 7 from the area regeneration division of the Scottish Office development department and two by officials at grade 5 and grade 7 from the same division.

Water Authorities

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many posts within the East, West and North of Scotland water authorities have salary levels above £42,000 per annum; and if he will list these posts and the salary and grading levels for each of these posts. [17574]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 February 1996]: Thirty-six posts in the three new water authorities carry salaries in excess of £42,000 per annum. These are as listed.

West of Scotland Water Authority:
- Chief Executive
- Operations Director
- Finance Director
- Engineering Services Director
- Human Resources Director
- Support Services Director
- Scientific Services Director
- Customer Services Director
- Special Projects Director
- Business Planning Director
- External Services Manager
- Operations Support Manager.

North of Scotland Water Authority:
- Chief Executive
- Managing Director Finance
- Managing Direct Water Services
- Director of Human Resources
- Director of Corporate Services
- Group Finance Controller
- Head of Information Technology
- Finance Planning Controller
- Director Capital Procurement

- Chief Executive
- Director of Operations
- Director of Water Quality
- Director of Corporate Services
- Director of Finance
- Director of Human Resources
- Head of Legal Services
- Head of Information Technology
- Human Resource Manager
- Group Financial Controller.

Detailed information about individuals' salaries and gradings is not held centrally as these are operational matters for the water authorities. Information on posts carrying salaries of £42,000 per annum or more has been collected and is set out in salary bands in the following table:

Salary band	West of Scotland Water authority	North of Scotland Water authority	East of Scotland Water authority
£42,001–50,000	4	6	4
£50,001–60,000	5	5	3
£60,001–70,000	2	2	2
£70,001–80,000	1	1	1

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many posts the East, West and North of Scotland water authorities each expect to have within their organisations when they become operational on 1 April; and if he will provide a further breakdown of these figures to indicate the nature and number of the posts within these organisations' overall structures. [17575]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 February 1996]: The information contained in the following table is based on present estimates of staffing levels at 1 April and will be subject to revision. The information is broken down by the functional groupings established within each authority.

Function	Estimated number of employees
West of Scotland Water Authority
Operations	2,240

Roy Summers	3,242	200

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the budgets for each of the East, West and North of Scotland water authorities in the financial year 1996–97. [17573]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 February 1996]: Budget setting is a matter for each of the new water authorities. Among the principal determinants will be the external financing limits which have already been announced and the charges schemes which have yet to be approved.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what training Benefits Agency staff and Benefits Agency medical services doctors receive in mental health problems in assessing applications for incapacity benefit. [15868]

Mr. Burt: The administration of incapacity benefit is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 28 February 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what training Benefits Agency staff and Benefit Agency Medical Services (BAMS) doctors receive in mental health problems in assessing applications for Incapacity Benefit (IB).

BA staff receive training in handling claims from persons suffering from mental health conditions as part of a general IB training course. This course provides instruction in dealing with all aspects of claims to IB, including guidance on identifying when customers may be suffering from mental health conditions; and the appropriate action to take to obtain sufficient information to enable the adjudication officer to give a decision on the appropriate test of incapacity.

All doctors, full time, contract and sessional, employed by BAMS to carry out assessments for IB have undergone specific training to carry out the mental health assessment. All BAMS doctors attend a four day training course which includes a module designed specifically to cover the assessment of mental health problems.

In addition all full-time and short term contract doctors attend a two-day medical education conference during which there is a session devoted specifically to the assessment of mental health problems, this session is led by a consultant psychiatrist.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of extending the linking rule for periods of incapacity for work or interruption of employment from eight weeks to (a) 13 weeks, (b) 26 weeks, (c) one year and (d) two years. [18229]

Mr. Burt: There is insufficient information available on which to base estimates.

Contributions Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposed restructuring of the Contributions Agency on levels of service to customers and expected response times to inquiries and complaints; what savings he expects the restructuring to achieve; and what will be the effect on jobs in Wales within the Contributions Agency. [17829]

Mr. Heald: The administration of the Contributions Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 28 February 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about the operational matters relating to the Agency.

I have been asked to reply to your enquiry regarding the assessment of the proposed restructuring of the Contributions Agency and the affect on jobs in Wales within the Agency.

The proposed reorganisation of the Contributions Agency Field Operations has been the subject of a feasibility study and an extensive trial period in both rural and urban areas. Information from customer satisfaction surveys has also been taken into account to inform on the development, to ensure that the Agency continues to maintain the commitment to serve delivery outlined in its Contributor and Employer Charters.

Precise details of savings cannot be determined during the planning and development stage of the reorganisation. However it is estimated that there will be significant savings in management costs. Savings in accommodation and related costs will be captured as the reorganisation is implemented.

In line with the Governments White Paper "Continuity and Change in the Civil Service" the emphasis is to achieve increased efficiency with reduced costs. The new organisation will inevitably operate with a reduced resource allocation. In Wales that will result in a reduction in staffing levels of 14%.

I hope you will find the reply helpful, if you require anything further please let me know.

Income Support

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners were in receipt of income support in Wales at the latest available date; what estimate he has made of the numbers of pensioners eligible for income support but not claiming it; and if he will make a statement. [17581]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 28 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many pensioners were in receipt of Income Support (IS) in Wales at the latest available date; what estimate he has made of the numbers of pensioners eligible for IS but not claiming it; and if he will make a statement.

The number of pensioners receiving IS in Wales in November 1995 was 92,339. This is the latest available figure. It is provisional and may be subject to change.

The figures for the numbers of pensioners eligible for IS but not claiming in Great Britain are contained in the publication Income Related Benefits Estimates of Take-Up in 1993/94, copies of which have been placed in the library. A separate figure for Wales is unavailable because the sample size would be too small to give statistically reliable results.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mortgage Interest Payment Assistance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of extending the assistance with mortgage interest payments currently available under income support to people in work whose incomes would qualify them for housing benefit if they were in rented accommodation. [18230]

Mr. Roger Evans: Entitlement to housing benefit is dependent not only on income but on eligible rent. Without information equivalent to eligible rents for the owner-occupied sector it is not possible to make such an estimate. The necessary information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the annual number of applications for attendance allowance in Wales for each of the last five years indicating the proportion (a) approved, (b) withdrawn and (c) rejected. [17579]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Rhodri Morgan, dated 28 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the annual number of applications for Attendance Allowance (AA) in Wales for each of the last five years indicating the proportion (a) approved, (b) withdrawn and (c) rejected.

Claims for AA in Wales are processed at the Cardiff Disability Benefits Centre. The information requested is shown in the following table:

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Claims received	38,067	34,301	30,732	32,981
Decisions made:
Awards	20,934	24,867	20,946	23,344
Withdrawn	n/a	403	340	272
Refusals	10,497	11,601	8,421	8,468

Figures are provisional and subject to change. The difference between the number of claims received and decisions made are the claims that are waiting for adjudication decisions and carried forward in to the next year. The figures requested for the years 1990–91 are not available.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the value, in cash terms, of the savings to the Benefits Agency which have resulted from the contract awarded to BET to provide accommodation and office services to the Benefits Agency; [17754]

(2) which consultants were employed by the Benefits Agency to review the operation of the contract awarded to BET to provide accommodation and office services to the Benefits Agency; what was the value of that contract; and if he will place a copy of the consultant's report in the Library. [17704]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Hutton, dated 28 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what is his estimate of the value, in cash terms, of the savings to the Benefits Agency (BA) which have resulted from the contract awarded to BET to provide accommodation and office services to the BA; and which consultants were employed by the BA to review the operation of the contract awarded to BET to provide accommodation and office services to the BA; what was the value of that contract; and if he will place a copy of the consultants's report in the Library.

The BA has seven contracts with BET for accommodation and office services and the cash savings to the BA resulting from these contracts are estimated as £4.87 million per year.

The BA keeps all contracts under internal review by monitoring their effectiveness in delivering services while maintaining value for money. The Agency employs a number of consultants to provide technical and contracting advice in support of the Department of Social Security's Competing for Quality programme. The consultants advise on draft contracts and contract variations, the contractual implications of policy and procedural changes and on the best contract practice to secure contained value for money. Although consultants may also be asked to give advice on contracts as they are reviewed, it is not possible to identify a proportion of consultants' costs attributable solely to work relating to the contracts BA has with BET. This is because most of the consultants work concerns issues of general relevance to all the contracts relating to the Competing for Quality Programme.

Internal consultants have carried out a specific study relating to one BET contract. The approximate cost of this study was £2,500. This study contains commercial information which has been given in confidence, therefore a copy will not be placed in the library.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17688]

Mr. Burt: Statistics concerning staff employed in this Department are normally based on pay and personnel records which include information on gender. Statistical information about personnel can therefore usually be broken down by gender.

Information is available by gender for all benefits administered by the Department.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of extending entitlement to non-means-tested jobseeker's allowance from six months to one year. [18236]

Mr. Roger Evans: Extending entitlement to contributory jobseeker's allowance from six months to one year would be equivalent to restoring the reduction in entitlement to contribution-based benefit from 12 months to six resulting from the replacement of unemployment benefit with jobseeker's allowance in October 1996. The current estimates for the savings from this reduction are £30 million in 1996–97 and £145 million in 1997–98. These figures are lower than previous estimates due to revised forecasts of unemployment and changes to the transitional arrangement for those in receipt of unemployment benefit when jobseeker's allowance is introduced.

Notes:

1. Estimates assume 2.1 million unemployed claimants (GB) and 405,000 unemployment benefit claimants in the absence of jobseeker's allowance.
2. Savings are estimated using 1991–92–93 FES data and 1994 unemployment benefit statistics.
3. Savings are rounded to the nearest £5 million.
4. 1996–97 savings are in 1996–97 prices. 1997–98 savings are in 1997–98 prices.
5. Figures assume transitional protection in 1996–97.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of raising the applicable amounts under disability working allowance by (a) £5, (b) £10 and (c) £25, giving figures separately for single claimants, couples and lone parents. [18243]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Information is not available in the format requested. Available information is given in the table. Costs are given in cash terms, and are net of income-related benefit offset savings.

£ million

Cash	1996–97	1997–98
(a) Raising applicable amount by £5	[1]—	[1]—
(b) Raising applicable amount by £10	5	5
(c) Raising applicable amount by £25	10	15

[1] Represents a figure less than £2.5 million.

Notes:

1. Estimates rounded to nearest £5 million.
2. Information from the "Family Expenditure Survey" (1991, 1992 and 1993) is used to estimate the effects of these changes.
3. Estimates are based on sample data and should be used with extreme caution.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of reducing the taper for the withdrawal of disability working allowance to (a) 65 per cent., (b) 60 per cent., (c) 55 per cent., and (d) 50 per cent., and what would be the effect on claimant numbers in each case. [18109]

Mr. Mitchell: The estimated effects of changes in the disability working allowance taper are given in the table. Estimates are expressed in cash terms and are net of income-related benefit offsetting savings.

Reduce DWA taper to:	1996–97	1997–98
(a) 65 per cent.
Cost	[1]—	£5 million
Additional DWA recipients	1,000	1,000
(b) 60 per cent.
Cost	£5 million	£5 million
Additional DWA recipients	2,000	2,000
(c) 55 per cent.
Cost	£10 million	£10 million
Additional DWA recipients	3,000	4,000

Reduce DWA taper to:	1996–97	1997–98
(d) 50 per cent.
Cost	£10 million	£15 million
Additional DWA recipients	6,000	7,000

[1] Represents a figure less than £2.5 million.

Notes:

1. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £55 million.
2. Estimates of additional DWA recipients rounded to the nearest 1,000.
3. Information from the family expenditure survey (1991, 1992 and 1993) is used to estimate the effects of these changes.
4. Estimates are based on sample data and should be used with extreme caution.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what statistics he collects about the range and averages of earnings and hours of work of people in receipt of disability working allowance. [18103]

Mr. Mitchell: Information about the range and averages of earnings can be found in the "Disability Working Allowance Statistics Quarterly Enquiry" (July 1995), a copy of which is in the Library.

No reliable information on hours worked is held.

Family Credit

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of replacing the child care disregard under family credit with a credit of the same cash value, up to a maximum of £42 to be added to the applicable amount of families with paid child care. [18237]

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated cost of replacing the family credit child care disregard with a credit of the same cash value up to a maximum of £42 a week is £25 million for 1996–97 and 1997–98. This does not allow for behavioural effects.

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on family expenditure surveys, uprated at 1996–97 and 1997–98 levels of prices, earnings and benefit rates, adjusted using the 1993–94 family resources survey data on the use of childcare.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of extending entitlement to social fund (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) cold weather payments to families in receipt of family credit. [18244]

Mr. Evans: Since the discretionary social fund is cash limited, extending eligibility to community care grants and budgeting loans to families in receipt of family credit without increasing the cash limit would result in a higher rate of refusals but no extra cost, other than for the administration of any additional applications.

Alternatively, if the cash limit were increased in proportion to the number of families receiving family credit compared with those receiving income support, assuming the same level of demand is met and comparable eligibility conditions apply, we estimate that an increase would be required to (a) the community care grants budget and to (b) the net amount available for budgeting loans as shown in the table. However, in a discretionary scheme there would be no guarantee that additional expenditure would all go to family credit recipients.

It is not possible to estimate the additional cost of cold weather payments, since the number of payments, being dependent on the weather, varies hugely and unpredictably from year to year. However, we estimate that the total number of eligible people and administration costs would be increased by roughly 10 per cent.

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	Administration costs, yearly
(a) Community care grants	10	10	2
(b) Budgeting loans	15	7	5

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the current numbers and proportions of family credit recipients who are (a) lone parents, (b) one-earner couples and (c) two-earner couples. [18096]

Mr. Evans: The information is set out in the table:

	Number of cases	Percentage
All FC recipients	626,000	100
Lone parents	277,000	44.2
One earner couples	323,000	51.7
Two earner couples	27,000	4.2

Note:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand and percentages to one decimal place.

Family Credit Statistics Quarterly Enquiry July 1995.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of (a) ignoring a spouse's earnings entirely for the purpose of calculating entitlement to family credit and (b) aligning the treatment of a spouse's earnings for the purpose of calculating entitlement to family credit with the rules which apply to a spouse's earnings under the invalid care allowance. [18112]

Mr. Evans: The structure of family credit in effect provides a disregard of the first £73 of earned income in the household. The estimated cost of introducing a further complete disregard for spouses' earned income in family credit is £235 million for 1996–97 and £240 million for 1997–98.

Because of the different structures of invalid care allowance and family credit, it is not possible to estimate the costs of applying a disregard structure similar to that in invalid care allowance to family credit.

Notes:

1. Estimates are based on the family expenditure surveys of 1991, 1992 and 1993, and family credit quarterly enquiry statistics (July 1995) uprated to 1996–97 or 1997–98 prices and benefit levels.
2. Estimates of costs are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Dyslexia

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the percentage of the population with severe literacy problems caused by dyslexia; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that they are covered by regulations under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. [17918]

Mr. Burt: Information is not held centrally about the percentage of the population with severe literacy problems caused by dyslexia.

The Disability Discrimination Act defines disability as a physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term adverse effect on a person's ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities. Anyone with dyslexia meeting this definition will be protected by the provisions of the legislation. Effects which are severe would satisfy the requirement that effects should be at least substantial.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues and claimant numbers in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of reducing the taper for the withdrawal of housing benefit to (a) 60 per cent. and (b) 50 per cent. [18231]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Estimated cost of reducing the housing benefit taper

	Cost (£ million)		Increase in Housing Benefit caseload (000s)
Taper	1996–97	1997–98	1996–97	1997–98
60 per cent.	160	175	35	35
50 per cent.	550	595	160	160

1. Estimates based on the family expenditure surveys of 1991, 1992 and 1993, uprated to 1996–97 or 1997–98 prices and benefit levels.
2. Estimates of costs are rounded to the nearest £5 million.
3. Estimates of caseloads are rounded to the nearest 5,000.

Home Responsibilities Protection

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of people in each of the last three years for which statistics are available who (a) were entitled to home responsibilities protection, (b) ceased to be entitled as a result of resuming to pay national insurance contributions, (c) ceased to be entitled as a result of claiming a retirement pension and (d) ceased to be entitled due to other changes in circumstances. [18110]

Mr. Heald: The information available is given in the table.

Earnings Disregard

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of introducing a disregard of (a) £25 or (b) £50 to be set against a spouse's earnings in two-earner couples for the purpose of calculating entitlement to family credit. [18102]

Mr. Roger Evans: The structure of family credit in effect provides a disregard of the first £73 of earned income in the household. The estimated cost of introducing further disregards is set out in the table:

	£25 disregard		£50 disregard
	1996–97	1997–98	1996–97	1997–98
Total cost (£ million)	40	45	90	95

1. Estimates are based on the family expenditure surveys of 1991, 1992 and 1993, and family credit quarterly enquiry statistics July 1995, uprated to 1996–97 or 1997–98 prices and benefit levels.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are currently the average numbers and proportions of income support recipients who have earnings set against an earnings disregard of (a) £5, (b) £10, (c) £15 and (d) £25, giving figures separately for (i) single people, (ii) married couples, (iii) second-earner spouses and (iv) lone parents. [18070]

Mr. Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. The available information is set out in the table. There is no £25 earnings disregard in income support. The £10 couple disregard will be introduced in October 1996 for income support and jobseeker's allowance.

Claimant group	Amount of earnings disregarded £	Number of cases	Percentage of claimant group
(i) Single claimants	0.01–5.00	32,000	0.7

	Total	159,000	2.8

Notes:
1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand. A dash represents numbers less than 500.
2. The amounts shown are the actual amounts disregarded. These may be less than the full amount of earnings disregard that the claimant is entitled to.
3. Self-employed earnings are not shown.
4. Couples include cohabitees and spouses.

Free School Meals

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of extending entitlement to free school meals to families receiving family credit. [18242]

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of extending entitlement to free school meals to families receiving family credit. [18234]

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated cost of extending entitlement to free school meals to families receiving family credit is £150 million in both 1996–97 and 1997–98.

Therapeutic Earnings

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate (a) the number and proportion of invalidity benefit claimants in 1994–95 with therapeutic earnings, (b) the current number and proportion of incapacity benefit claimants with therapeutic earnings which are still subject to the rules which applied before 13 April 1995 and (c) the current number and proportion of incapacity benefit claimants with therapeutic earnings. [18069]

Mr. Burt: Information on which to base estimates is not available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of abolishing (a) the 16 hours rule and (b) the earnings rule for therapeutic earnings under incapacity benefit. [18232]

Mr. Burt: There is insufficient information available on which to base estimates.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of people in each of the last three years for which statistics are available who (a) were in receipt of invalid care allowance, (b) who ceased to be entitled to invalid care allowance as a result of earnings above the earnings limit, (c) who ceased to be entitled to invalid care benefit due to their age and (d) who ceased to be entitled due to other changes in circumstances. [18115]

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table[1]:

	1993	1994	1995
ICA Recipients,	230,313	273,901	316,353
Cessations due to earnings	2,524	3,119	4,688
Cessations due to age[2]	Nil	Nil	Nil

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are currently the range and average level of earnings of people in receipt of invalid care allowance and of their spouses, giving figures separately for each; and what are (a) the number and proportion of invalid care allowance claimants with earnings, (b) the number and proportion of married invalid care allowance claimants whose spouses are earning and (c) the number of invalid care allowance claimants who have lost additional payments for (1) one child, (2) two children and (3) three or more children as a result of the level of their spouses' earnings. [18114]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

As at 28 February 1996, the number of invalid care allowance claimants with earnings is 23,252, which represents 7.2 per cent. of the total number of recipients.

Note: figures are based on a 100 per cent. count of cases.

Social Fund

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the effect on public revenues in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of extending entitlement to social fund (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) cold weather payments to families in receipt of family credit. [18105]

Mr. Roger Evans: Since the discretionary social fund is cash limited, extending eligibility to community care grants and budgeting loans to families in receipt of family credit without increasing the cash limit would result in a higher rate of refusals but no extra cost, other than for the administration of any additional applications.

Alternatively, if the cash limit was increased in proportion to the number of families receiving family credit compared with those receiving income support, assuming the same level of demand is met and comparable eligibility conditions apply, we estimate that an increase would be required to (a) the community care grants budget and to (b) the net amount available for budgeting loans as shown in the table. However, in a discretionary scheme there would be no guarantee that additional expenditure would all go to family credit recipients.

It is not possible to estimate the additional cost of cold weather payments, since the number of payments, being dependent on the weather, varies hugely and unpredictably from year to year. However, we estimate that the total number of eligible people and administration costs would be increased by roughly 10 per cent.

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	Administration costs, yearly
(a) Community care grants	10	10	2
(b) Budgeting loans	15	7	5

Prescription Charges

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what estimate his Department has made of the amount of money which will be reclaimed under the new rules for prescription charges in respect of men aged between 60 and 65 years; [16945]

(2) how many pensioners have claimed refunds of prescription charges under the new rules affecting men aged between 60 and 65 years. [16944]

Mr. Malone: I have been asked to reply.

We do not hold figures on the number of men aged 60 to 65 who have paid prescription charges prior to the European Court of Justice ruling. Following our invitation to register a claim we have issued over 187,000 claim forms to men in the United Kingdom. At the close of business on 23 February 132,000—70 per cent.—had been returned.

To date the prescription claims processing unit has authorised payments totalling £2.6 million to 83,000—63 per cent.—men. At this stage it is not possible to forecast accurately the total cost of likely refunds but they are not expected to exceed £6 million. This does not include the cost of prepayment certificates refunded locally by family health services authorities. Administration costs will be additional.

WALES

Breast Cancer Services

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numbers, grades, jobs designations and health authority area of full-time breast cancer staff working in the NHS in Wales for each year since 1990. [16625]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is not available centrally.

Chernobyl

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to revoke the various emergency restrictions imposed in response to the Chernobyl disaster. [17051]

Mrs. Gwilym Jones: Radiocaesium contamination from the Chernobyl accident continues to affect certain upland areas of sheep grazing in north Wales. Although there has been a general decline in the activity of the radiocaesium the actual rate of decline depends on the interaction of a number of factors such as soil type, vegetation, weather, drainage and sheep grazing preference. The variable interaction between these factors does not enable an accurate forecast to be made of the length of time sheep controls will be required.

Regular monitoring of radiocaesium levels in sheep, and other relevant information, enables suitable areas to be identified for a comprehensive survey and assessment to determine the prospects for removing controls. Following such work my right hon. Friend was able to lift controls from over 65 sq k in the Snowdon area on 17 January 1996. The area originally affected by sheep controls was approximately 4,100 sq k, but has now been reduced to approximately 580 sq k.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research he has commissioned to assess the long-term effects of the Chernobyl incident on (a) Welsh agriculture and (b) land use in the affected areas. [17052]

Mr. Jones: In Wales land affected by the Chernobyl accident is predominantly confined to certain upland areas of north Wales used for sheep grazing. Other than restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep from those areas there have been no long-term effects of Welsh agriculture or land use.

Research has identified ways to immobilise the transference of radioactivity through certain technical remedies and chemical land treatments. However, the potential adverse effect such land treatment could have on the natural environment of the area and the practical application of the other treatments are not necessarily appropriate to the area covered by restrictions. At present, the mark and release scheme remains the most satisfactory means of securing the protection of food chain safety and ensuring that normal sheep marketing practices within the restricted area continue with minimum disruption to farmers.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the revocation of the emergency restrictions imposed in response to the Chernobyl incident. [17053]

Mr. Jones: General inquiries are sometimes received about the length of time sheep restrictions will be required. Our policy of regularly informing farmers affected by restrictions and their unions of the current position is intended to provide them with a full understanding of the situation. This can be judged by the continued co-operation and patience farmers have shown in the need to retain restrictions and their help in maintaining confidence in the quality of Welsh lamb.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16884]

Mr. Hague: Staff in my Department faced with a potential conflict of interest must declare the position to senior management who can consider how best to proceed. This requirement is set out in the Welsh Office terms and conditions of service code.

Staff disclose relevant interests on the understanding that this, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer.

Milford Haven Waterway

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the designation of the Milford Haven waterway as a special area of conservation; and if he will make a statement. [17375]

Mr. Hague: Ministers and officials received nine responses following the public consultation exercise undertaken last year from organisations representing a range of interests. Some expressed concern about the socio-economic effects of the proposed designation, others supported it fully, some suggested that the site was not large enough, while others raised queries about the proposed boundaries. All responses received will be taken into account before a decision is made on whether or not to submit the site to the European Commission.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to submit his plans for the designation of the Milford Haven waterway as a special area of conservation. [17374]

Mr. Hague: A public consultation exercise was undertaken last March on over 280 potential special areas of conservation in the United Kingdom. Two hundred and eleven of these sites—including 34 in Wales—have already been submitted to the European Commission as potential SACs. It is hoped that the remaining sites, which include the proposed Milford Haven and Pembrokeshire islands SAC, can be submitted in due course. No decision will be made until all points raised during the consultation have been fully considered.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS Ltd., indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17459]

Mr. Hague: My Department does not currently hold any contracts with EDS.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of children of secondary school age attend a grammar school. [17500]

Mr. Richards: There are no grammar schools in Wales.

Inward Investment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the new overseas industrial inward investment projects secured by Wales over the past two years were introduced by Invest in Britain. [17229]

Mr. Hague: In the financial years 1993–94 and 1994–95 two new inward investment projects were introduced to Wales by the Invest in Britain Bureau.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many inward investment projects have settled in Wales as a result of guidance given by the Invest in Britain Bureau over the past three years; and if he will make a statement. [17734]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1992–93, the bureau was significantly involved in two of the 60 projects recorded by Wales; in 1993–94, the bureau was involved in one of the 64 projects recorded; and in 1994–95, the bureau was involved in three of the 51 projects recorded.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many grant-maintained schools there are in each of the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17502]

Mr. Richards: The information requested is given in the following table.

Distribution of grant-maintained schools in Wales by county

County	Number of Schools
	Primary	Secondary	Total
Clwyd	2	4	6
Dyfed	—	—	—
Gwent	1	3	4
Gwynedd	1	—	1
Mid Glamorgan	—	—	—
Powys	1	—	1
South Glamorgan	—	3	3
West Glamorgan	—	1	1
Wales	5	11	16

Wind Turbines

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many wind turbines have been erected in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17501]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Some 224 wind turbines have been erected in Wales with the support of the non-fossil fuel obligation. A small number of turbines have also been constructed outside the NFFO framework; however, details are not held by this Department.

Drug and Substance Abuse

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures his Department has adopted to combat (a) drugs abuse and (b) substance abuse. [17379]

Mr. Richards: A Welsh office consultation paper "Forward Together" which sets out a strategy for tackling drug and alcohol misuse in Wales was launched on 16 October 1995. This paper sets out the measures to be adopted to combat the misuse of drugs and other substances in Wales including the establishment of a new Welsh drug and alcohol unit. The intention is to publish the final strategy document in spring 1996.

I have also announced our intention to reconstitute the Welsh Committee on Drug and Alcohol Misuse. Membership of the committee will be announced in the coming weeks.

Deprived Youths (Training)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will initiate training schemes for deprived youth in the Alyn and Deeside constituency. [17503]

Mr. Richards: The Welsh Office already guarantees a training place to all young people who are not in full-time education, training or employment through its youth credits and modern apprenticeships programmes. As part of its work in delivering this guarantee in the Alyn and Deeside constituency, the North East Wales training and enterprise council operates, as an integral part of its youth training provision, a bridge to work programme which specially caters for those young people who are disadvantaged in the labour market.

Homelessness

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will break down the number of people who were accepted as homeless in the county of Mid Glamorgan over the last five years by (a) sex and (b) age group; and if he will make a statement; [17511]

(2) if he will break down the number of people who were accepted as homeless in Dyfed over the last five years by (a) sex and (b) age group; and if he will make a statement. [17530]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

A470 Extension

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the construction on the A470 extension of the Cardiff to Merthyr trunk road to the A465 Heads of the Valleys road to Cefn Coed is expected to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [17562]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Pentrebach to Cefn Coed scheme, which extends the improvement of the A470 to the A465, is expected to be completed in spring 1997.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the construction companies currently working on the A470 extension of the Cardiff to Merthyr trunk road to the A465 Heads of the Valleys road at Cefn Coed. [17563]

Mr. Jones: The Pentrebach to Cefn Coed scheme, which extends the improvement of the A470 to the A465, comprises two contracts. The main contractors are:

Southern Section (Pentrebach to Swansea Road)—Taylor Woodrow Civil Engineering Ltd.

Northern Section (Swansea Road to Cefn Coed)—Christiani and Nielsen Ltd.

A465

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the construction on the A465 from Aberdulais to Glyn Neath will be completed; and if he will make a statement. [17566]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Construction on the A465 between Aberdulais and Glynneath is expected to be completed in early 1997.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the engineering and statutory procedures will be completed on the rebuilding of the A465 Abergavenny to Hirwaun dual carriageway; and if he will make a statement. [17524]

Mr. Jones: Work is currently expected to start on this scheme in 1999, subject to satisfactory completion of design and statutory procedures, and the availability of finance.

Companies (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been received by the Welsh Development Agency for financial assistance for companies; and what is (a) the number approved, (b) the total financial value of the approved applications and (c) the average time taken to process and approve these applications in the last three years for which figures are available. [16980]

Mr. Hague: I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to my hon. Friend and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17692]

Mr. Hague: In conducting statistical surveys of, or about, individuals the Welsh Office collects information on gender where this is relevant to analysis of the survey data. Aggregated statistics about individuals are published by gender where appropriate.

Reservoirs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Offical Report, column 403, on what date his officials were most recently informed by Dwr Cymru and the National Rivers Authority, Wales region, of reservoir levels; and if he will give the percentage level of the water in each of Dwr Cymru's principal reservoirs at the corresponding date. [18204]

Mr. Hague: My Department has received information from Dwr Cymru on reservoir levels in Wales most recently as at 26 February 1996. The information requested is shown in the following table.

Principal Welsh Reservoir Levels as at 26 February 1996

	Percentage full

Waiting List Initiative Funds

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, columns 732-33 what was the total amount of waiting list initiative funds granted to each family health services authority since 1 January. [18205]

Mr. Hague: In the financial year 1995–96, waiting times initiative funding was allocated on a district basis. Within each district, the health authority and family health services authority were asked to agree on the division of the funding. The amounts agreed for family health services authorities are as follows:

FHSA	£
Clwyd	nil
Dyfed	110,200
Gwent	50,000
Gwynedd	9,000
Mid Glamorgan	100,000
Powys	nil
South Glamorgan	250,000
West Glamorgan	520,000
Total	1,039,200

In addition, family health services authorities may receive a share of the residual funding of £125,000 recently notified to health authorities.

Sea Empress

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements have been made for the long-term monitoring of the effects of the oil spill on the marine ecosystem around the Pembrokeshire coast. [17970]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has provided £250,000 to the Countryside Council for Wales to enable it to conduct a study of the entire marine environment, and initiate a long-term monitoring programme, in the area affected by the spill.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what resources he has made available to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds to assist those organisations in their rescue of sea birds and other wildlife affected by oil from the Sea Empress. [18108]

Mr. Jones: Compensation for cost incurred and economic loss suffered as a result of the oil pollution damage from the Sea Empress, including the costs of reasonable measures taken to prevent or minimise the damage, are available from the ship owner's insurer and from the international oil compensation fund, which is funded by levies on the oil industry.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what further assessment he makes of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G13.125, page 1996, in respect of his legal and constitutional responsibility to promote the public interst; and if he will make a statement; [16996]

(2) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusions in G13.106 that the brief to Mr. Moses and his submissions to Judge Smedley were inconsistent with the Deputy Prime Minister's views; and if he will make a statement; [16994]

(3) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G13.123 that he must bear responsibility for inadequate instructions to Mr. Moses. [16993]

The Attorney-General: The Treasury Solicitor's Department instructed prosecuting counsel in relation to public interest immunity on behalf of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Defence.

All the Ministers who signed PII certificates in the Matrix Churchill case, including my right hon. Friend the then President of the Board of Trade, were satisfied that there was, in principle, a public interest in non-disclosure of documents within the classes as formulated in the certificates, and that the documents in question fell within those classes.

Having regard to the law as it then stood, in the light of the President's concerns, I advised him on a specially drafted PII certificate which emphasised that he was doing no more than performing his duty to assert PII, and that it was for the court to decide which documents should be disclosed.

In the circumstances, as my evidence to the Scott inquiry made clear, the instructions to counsel in relation to the DTI were inadequate and counsel should have been shown my exchange of letters with the President, but these were not matters for my personal supervision.

Sir Richard Scott's comments on my role derive from the fact that he takes a fundamentally different view of the law and does not believe that the President was under any such duty. I am satisfied that the advice I gave was correct and that the decision on disclosure was for the court, not Ministers.

Prosecuting counsel, in line with the President's specially drafted PII certificate, emphasised to the court that Ministers were doing no more than performing their duty to assert PII, and that it was for the court to decide which documents should be disclosed. At counsel's invitation the judge read every document covered by all the PII certificates and duly decided which should be disclosed.

The law has now moved on. Following the decision in ex parte Wiley (1994), Ministers are now able to form their own judgment as to whether material should be disclosed. In the light of that decision, submissions to Ministers on PII are now fuller and take into account Ministers' expanded role.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.60 that Government are entitled to authorise the disclosure of its confidential or secret documents; and if he will make a statement. [17005]

The Attorney-General: Public interest immunity applies only to disclosure in the context of legal proceedings. Following the decision of the House of Lords in ex parte Wiley, a Minister is entitled to volunteer disclosure where he concludes that this is in the overall public interest. It has always been for Ministers to decide whether disclosure for purposes other than legal proceedings is in the public interest.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.58 in respect of Viscount Simon's judgement in Duncan v. Cammell Laird 1942; and if he will make a statement. [17004]

The Attorney-General: The decision in Duncan v. Cammell Laird (1942) was overtaken by the decision of the House of Lords in Conway v. Rimmer (1968), which effected a major change in the law as to the function of Ministers in claiming public interest immunity. The Government's approach to PII in the Matrix Churchill case was fully in accordance with the law as it then stood in the light of Conway v. Rimmer and the later authorities. With the House of Lords decision in ex parte Wiley (1994) there has been a further change.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in sections G18.66 that his advice was without sound legal foundation; and if he will make a statement; [16998]

(2) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.54 that his views on Ministers' legal duties to claim PII were based on a fundamental misconception of PII law; and if he will make a statement. [16997]

The Attorney-General: The advice I gave on PII at the time of the Matrix Churchill trial was entirely in accordance with the law as it then stood. It was based on careful, detailed advice from a team of distinguished independent practitioners, was fully supported by the case law and has been publicly endorsed by three of the defence counsel and a number of other eminent commentators including the Master of the Rolls.

Since the Matrix Churchill trial the decision of the House of Lords in ex parte Wiley (1994) has brought about a change in the law on PII.

For a full analysis I refer the hon. Member to the document entitled "Public interest immunity: Government response to the Scott Report", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.104 that the class claims made in the Matrix Churchill trial should have had no place in a criminal trial; and if he will make a statement. [16999]

The Attorney-General: The class claims made in the Matrix Churchill trial were of a kind which were well established and recognised by the courts. The trial judge held that they had been properly made. The application of PII to criminal cases has been confirmed by the higher courts. For example, the Court of Appeal upheld class claims for material relating to national security and communications with foreign Governments in Ordtec—R v. Blackledge and others—(1995).

As to the future, I have announced that the Government are considering carefully the recommendations in the Scott report in relation to PII and are seeking the views of interested parties.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G13.17 that the ability of the prosecution to introduce evidence within a public interest immunity class without making it available to the defence is one-sided. [17324]

The Attorney-General: Public interest immunity applies regardless of whether the prosecution or the defence seeks disclosure of the material in question. At the relevant time a Minister was under a duty to claim PII where it applied, except where it was clear that on any view the court was bound to order disclosure—the so-called Makanjuola exception. The Makanjuola exception was not expressly applied to the disclosure of the material referred to in paragraph G13.17 of the Scott report. It is accepted that the prior approval of the Secretary of State for disclosure should have been obtained. However, on the basis that disclosure could in the circumstances have been justified as falling within the scope of the Makanjuola exception, there was no inconsistency between that disclosure and the PII claims that were made in the case.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General when he first consulted with other Cabinet Ministers about the contents of the report of the Scott inquiry; and where and when such discussions took place and with whom. [16514]

The Attorney-General [holding answer 22 February 1996]: It is not the practice to give details of ministerial meetings.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his oral answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 17, (1) when he read the letter from the Deputy Prime Minister dated 11 September; [16990]

(2) pursuant to his oral answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 17, who in his Department read the Deputy Prime Minister's letter dated 11 September; on what date; and on what date their contents were communicated directly to him; [16989]

(3) pursuant to his oral answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 17, if the written comments submitted to Sir Richard Scott on his behalf on 6 November 1995 confirmed that he had not read the Deputy Prime Minister's letter of 11 September prior to commencement of the Matrix Churchill trial on 12 October 1992. [16991]

(4) if he will publish the written comments submitted on his behalf to Sir Richard Scott on 6 November 1995; [16992]

The Attorney-General: One of my officials read my right hon. Friend's letter when it was received on 14 September 1992 and immediately sent a copy to the Treasury Solicitor's Department, which was responsible for instructing prosecuting counsel. I was away from my office during the week when the letter arrived.

The letter was a brief one. Its purpose was to thank me for my advice and for the revised draft PII certificate which I had proposed, and which my right hon. Friend had duly signed. I already knew this. In the circumstances there is nothing at all surprising in the fact that, as the Scott inquiry was informed in written comments submitted on 6 November 1995, the letter was not brought to my attention before the Matrix Churchill trial. I have no plans to publish those comments. Sir Richard Scott intends to publish in due course copies of all documents which he considers relevant to the text of his report.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in sections G13.113 and 115 that Ministers should inform the court if they have views on disclosure; and if he will make a statement; [17003]

(2) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.101 that it is a waste of public time and money to place the issue of disclosure in respect of trivial documents before the trial judge; and if he will make a statement; [17001]

(3) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G18.101 that judges may make mistakes; and if he will make a statement; [17002]

(4) what assessment he has made of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section G13.103 that Ministers were given insufficient guidance to come to a consistent view about the class of documents they were protecting; and if he will make a statement. [17323]

The Attorney-General: As the law on public interest immunity stood at the time of Matrix Churchill, it was for Ministers to advance a PII claim where they were satisfied that there was a public interest in not disclosing documents within the relevant classes, and that the documents fell within those classes. It was then the judge's function to weigh the public interest in non-disclosure against the public interest in disclosure for the purposes of doing justice. The judge was best placed to know the issues in the case and hence the degree of relevance of the documents in question.

Following the decision in ex parte Wiley (1994), Ministers can now weigh the competing interests for themselves and volunteer disclosure if they conclude that this is in the overall public interest. But where a Minister is not satisfied that disclosure should be made, the court remains the ultimate decision maker and must balance the competing public interests and rule on disclosure.

Departmental Officials (Interests)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the officials in his Department who have declared a current interest; what requirements are placed on officials to declare relevant interests; in what form records of such declarations are kept; and if he will establish a central register of officials' interests. [16885]

The Attorney-General: Comprehensive records are not held centrally for civil servants in the departments and agency for which I am responsible. Civil servants faced with a conflict of interest must declare their interest to senior management in accordance with the staff handbook of each department and agency. Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like other employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer. There are no plans to establish a central register of officials' interests.

Asil Nadir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Attorney-General what recent discussions he has held, and with whom, on the case of Mr. Asil Nadir. [17161]

The Attorney-General: Asil Nadir is the co-accused of Elizabeth Forsyth who is presently standing trial at the Central Criminal court. He has however left the jurisdiction and is the subject of an unexecuted warrant for his arrest. I have discussed the case from time to time with my officials and the director of the Serious Fraud Office.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS, indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17450]

The Attorney-General: None of the departments or agency for which I am responsible has entered into any contract with EDS, Electronic Data Systems.

Serious Fraud Cases

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to change the procedures governing the investigation and prosecution of serious fraud cases; and if he will make a statement. [17389]

The Attorney-General: None. The Serious Fraud Office and the fraud division of the Crown Prosecution Service continue to implement the recommendations of the Davie report as set out in my statement to the House on 31 March 1995, Official Report, column 1309. Copies of the report were placed in the Library of the House.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Attorney-General what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17685]

The Attorney-General: Statistics concerning staff employed in the departments and agency for which I am responsible are normally based on pay and personnel records which include information on gender. Statistical information about personnel can therefore usually be broken down by gender.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 1 March 1996

ENVIRONMENT

Secondary Liquid Fuels

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his Department's policy to permit the permanent use of secondary liquid fuels. [17912]

Mr. Clappison: Each application for the burning of secondary liquid fuels will be determined on its own merit and in accordance with the requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. If the operator of the plant has demonstrated, by trials, that there is no net adverse effect on the environment, authorisation with strict conditions under the Act is likely to be granted.

Flags

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning permission provisions apply to the flying of flags of non-sovereign nations, with special reference to the City of Westminster; what is his policy on this matter; what payment has to be made with a planning application to fly such a flag; and if he will make a statement. [18082]

Sir Paul Beresford: Provisions in schedule 2 (class I) to the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992 effectively enable the national flag of any country to be displayed in England and Wales, provided the flag is on a single, vertical flagstaff and there is no advertisement or subject matter additional to the flag's design. If these conditions are fulfilled, no application for planning permission or advertisement consent is required to fly a national flag. No special provisions apply in the City of Westminster.

My right hon. Friend has no proposals to amend these provisions.

Groundwater (London)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with London local authorities, Thames Water and London Underground about rising levels of groundwater underneath London; and if he will make a statement. [18299]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker) on Tuesday 27 February, Official Report, column 479–80.

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18136]

Sir Paul Beresford: Four serving civil servants in my Department currently hold non-executive company directorships. No fees are payable under the Cabinet Office rules:

Name	Company
Dr. Alan Apling	H. R. Wallingford Group	(ex officio)
Mr. Roger Courtney	Woods of Colchester
Mr. William Rickett	Redland Tile Business
Mr. John Stoker	Mersey Partnership	(ex officio)
	Hanson Brick

Hare Krishna Temple, Hertsmere

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in relation to the appeal over the Hare Krishna temple in Hertsmere, Hertfordshire; and when he expects to make a decision on it. [18505]

Sir Paul Beresford: A number of representations for and against the proposals were heard at least year's public inquiry into the planning appeal. We received the inspector's report in December, and we are considering his conclusions and recommendations very carefully. It is too early to say when the Secretary of State's decision will be issued.

Power Lines

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to meet the chief medical officer to discuss the potential danger to health from power pylons and lines; and if he will make a statement. [17972]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 29 February 1996]: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. The National Radiological Protection Board advises industry, local authorities and other regulators on these matters.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from (a) housing organisations, (b) mortgage lenders, and (c) health organisations about the potential danger to health from power pylons and lines. [17971]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 29 February 1996]: As far as is known, my right hon. Friend has received no direct representations from these bodies.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18141]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No central register is kept in this Dapartment of company directorships held by serving civil servants. However, members of staff are required to declare to senior management any commercial interest they may have. This requirement is set out in the Department's personnel management manual. Senior officials are not aware of any such declarations having been made by current members of staff. More detailed research would involve the examination of individual personal files and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Allen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what consultations he had with the secretary to the Cabinet concerning the Government's response to the Scott inquiry; and where and when such consultations took place. [16641]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Successive Governments have not disclosed the nature or the specific sources of the advice they receive from the civil service.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cultural Traditions Group

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what factors led the cultural traditions group to decline to utilise Ulster Scots in its logo; and what is its policy for ensuring a funding balance between Ulster's main cultural traditions and an appropriate input at policy level from each. [16748]

Mr. Ancram: The cultural traditions group continues to seek an appropriate expression of the Ulster Scots tradition for inclusion in its logo. The CTG's funding policy is to encourage respect for diversity by spreading knowledge of Northern Ireland's separate and shared traditions. It welcomes funding applications for projects reflecting any aspect of Northern Ireland's cultural heritage and considers each on its merits. Membership of the group and its sub-committees is representative of Northern Ireland's main cultural traditions and it welcomes policy submissions from any interested cultural organisation.

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS Ltd., indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17452]

Sir John Wheeler: One contract is currently held with EDS, the date of inception for which was 1 September 1995. This contract is due to last 19 months. I am unable to disclose the value of this contract as it is covered by commercial confidentiality.

Miss Rita O'Hare

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the arrest of Miss Rita O'Hare is still sought; and what attempts have been made to extradite her from the Irish Republic. [17099]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The arrest warrant for Ms O'Hare is still outstanding and has not been withdrawn.

The Royal Ulster Constabulary made a request to have Ms O'Hare extradited from the Republic of Ireland. However, she successfully relied on the political offence defence and won her case against extradition in the High Court in Dublin in March 1978.

Confiscation Unit

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review with the Director of Public Prosecutions in Northern Ireland the resources allocated to the confiscation unit. [17149]

Sir John Wheeler: The office of the Director of Public Prosecutions in Northern Ireland has in this financial year been allocated £7,089,000. The distribution and any reviews of this to specific parts of his office are matters for the director to decide.

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18143]

Sir John Wheeler: Central records indicate that we have no staff in Northern Ireland civil service departments serving as directors of companies.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17313]

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Transmissible Disease)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to ensure the confidentiality of medical checks on prisoners, including when a case of a transmissible disease is identified. [16703]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Neil Gerrard, dated 1 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the confidentiality of medical checks on prisoners.

All medical information on prisoners is held on the Inmate Medical Record (IMR) which is restricted to the medical team providing care to prisoners. The IMR accompanies transfer in a sealed package. Other communications regarding an inmate's medical status are made doctor to doctor.

It is Prison Service policy that medical confidentiality on inmates' medical information, including transmissible diseases is maintained.

All training of health care staff including Medical Officers, nurses, health care officers and counsellors, emphasises the importance of maintaining medical confidentiality.

Medical officers and nurses working in the Prison Service adhere to their professional codes of conduct concerning confidentiality of medical information. Other members of health care teams work under the supervision of the Medical Officer and adhere to that profession's code of conduct.

Ministerial Meetings (Immigration)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings were held by Ministers in his Department to discuss immigration cases with hon. Members in each year since 1979. [17061]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. In 1995, over 60 such meetings with hon. Members were held at the Home Office.

Criminal Cases Review Authority

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 720, if he will list the other sources from which candidates were drawn; and how many of the shortlisted candidates were applicants arising from (a) the advertisement and (b) other sources. [18156]

Mr. Kirkhope: The other sources from which candidates for the post of chairman of the Criminal Cases Review Commission were drawn were executive search, and lists of volunteers and nominees for public appointments drawn up in government. Of the six short-listed candidates, two responded to advertisements and four were found by executive search.

Gambling Controls

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Gaming Board has endorsed the changes to the controls over gambling announced on 27 February. [18454]

Mr. Kirkhope: The proposals are those of the Government. Nonetheless the Gaming Board has told me that it welcomes the Government's initiative in considering to what extent the controls on casinos and bingo clubs in the Gaming Act 1968 continue to meet present day requirements and in making proposals where the Government believe that controls can be updated or relaxed. The board also welcomes the fact that the Government are putting out their proposals for wide public consultation.

There is much in the consultation paper published on 27 February with which the board agrees and it will be able to support many of the proposals. There are several significant matters which the board has been asked to discuss with the industries concerned before proposals are finalised; and there are issues on which the board will wish to consider carefully the stance it should adopt.

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with the Gaming Board over the relaxation of regulations on casinos and other locations for gambling. [18455]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have had regular contact with the Gaming Board during the drafting of the proposals in the consultation paper published on 27 February. In particular, the board provided professional advice and comment on the factual analysis underpinning the document and on the practicability of various options for change. Its comments were taken into account in preparing the final version.

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18139]

Mr. Howard: Civil servants do not need permission to undertake and be paid for work outside normal working hours, provided there is no conflict of interest. There is no specific requirement for staff in the Home Office to report directorships held privately and no central record is kept. Any fees paid for such work would in any case be a matter of individual privacy. Only one official of the Home Office and its agencies, Dr. J. Thompson, has been given permission to become a non-executive director of KPMG, for developmental purposes; the appointment has yet to taken up. Under Cabinet Office guidance on developmental directorships, the individuals concerned do not receive payment from the companies concerned.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he first consulted other Cabinet Ministers about the contents of the report of the Scott inquiry; and where and when such discussions took place and with whom. [16515]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 22 February 1996]: It is not the practice to give details of ministerial meetings.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers." [17311]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February, Official Report, columns 589–604.

TRANSPORT

Roads

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the number of kilometres of motorway renewed, (b) the number of kilometres of trunk road renewed, (c) the number of bridges assessed for structural capacity and (d) the number of bridges strengthened by his Department in each financial year since 1989–90, including plans for the current year. [18166]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 1 March 1996:

As you know, the Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the number of kilometres of motorway renewed, (b) the number of kilometres of trunk road renewed, (c) the number of bridges assessed for structural capacity and (d) the number of bridges strengthened by his Department in each of the financial years since 1989–90 including plans for the current year.

The information requested for financial years 1989–90 to 1992–93 can be found in "Transport Report 1994—The Government's Expenditure Plans 1994–95 to 1996–97", Cm 2506, presented to Parliament in March 1994. For subsequent years the figures are as follows.

	1993–94 outturn	1994–95 outturn	1995–96 plans[1]
Motorway renewal (nlks[2])	234	277	110
Other trunk road renewal (nlks[2])	293	563	220
Bridges assessed	1,793	1,254	820
Bridges strengthened	46	164	77

[1] Revised plans announced to Parliament on 10 January 1996.
[2] Nearside lane kilometres.

Road Deaths

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of road deaths in the last year was caused by inappropriate speeds, in respect of (a) urban and (b) rural roads. [18180]

Mr. Norris: Figures are not available for percentage of road deaths caused by inappropriate speed in the last year. Various sources show that inappropriate speed is a factor in a third of all road accidents.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to include a section on walking in the next transport policies and programme circular. [18178]

Mr. Norris: I am currently considering the content of the next TPP circular. We will be consulting the local authority associations on this, and will take their views into account.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to encourage journeys on foot within the context of transport policy. [18179]

Mr. Norris: I have had meetings with a number of interested organisations to investigate the scope for taking forward new initiatives to encourage journeys on foot. In the meantime, my Department encourages local authorities in the TPP guidance and related guidance notes to promote modal shift to walking, along with other alternatives to the car, and to take the needs of pedestrians into account in the devising of transport strategies and the design of schemes. It also issues technical advice on the design of facilities for pedestrians.

Walking and Traffic Calming

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the local transport settlement in December 1995 was spent on (a) measures to improve walking and (b) traffic calming measures. [18177]

Mr. Norris: This information is not available. Pedestrian and traffic calming schemes generally cost less than £2 million each. Local authorities have discretion to allocate resources to schemes costing less than £2 million according to their own priorities. It is therefore up to them to decide, in drawing up their plans for 1996–97, what proportions of the resources allocated to them in the December 1995 settlement should be allocated to pedestrian and traffic calming schemes.

Cones Hotline

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many calls to the cones hotline (a) did and (b) did not result in remedial action; and what is the average cost per call, including his Department's internal costs. [18504]

Mr. Watts: In respect of the cones hotline, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 6 November 1995, Official Report, at column 759, and to my reply to the hon. Member's earlier question on 10 July 1995, Official Report, at column 403.

Since September 1995, the cones hotline has been replaced by the Highways Agency information line.

Tri-star Ambulance

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library reports commissioned by the Department of Transport on the safety aspects and specifications of the General Motors Corporation Tri-star ambulance; and if he will make a statement on its road safety record. [18556]

Mr. Norris: We have not commissioned any reports on the safety of the GMC Tri-star ambulance. Two accidents involving the vehicle were, however, examined by the Department's vehicle inspectorate as part of its routine accident investigation activities. The conclusion in both cases was that the accidents were due primarily to lack of driver familiarisation with the vehicle.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what elements of public expenditure will not be eligible for reimbursement from insurers of the Sea Empress or the international oil pollution compensation fund. [18359]

Mr. Norris: The international oil pollution compensation fund will not reimburse those elements of public expenditure which fall outside the definition of pollution damage under the relevant international conventions and the criteria for admissibility which have been agreed by its executive committee. The criteria for admissibility are described in the IOPC's claims manual, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the total amounts available within the international oil pollution compensation fund; and if he will list the contributors to the fund and the amount each has contributed. [18355]

Mr. Norris: The total amount of compensation available from the vessel's insurers and the international oil pollution compensation fund is 60 million special drawing rights, which is approximately equivalent to £57 million. The contributions to the fund are levied against major oil companies in each of the 67 member states of the fund. Information on individual contributors is not held by the Government.

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18150]

Mr. Norris: There are two civil servants in the Department who are non-executive directors of companies. John Denning is a non-executive director of Lloyds Register Quality Assurance Ltd. and David McMillan is a non-executive director of the P & O European Transport Services. No payment is made to the civil servants.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to publish his consultation document on the distribution of search and rescue helicopters around the United Kingdom coast. [18459]

Mr. Norris: We hope to consult on the recommendations of the report of the interdepartmental helicopter review group shortly.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government will make on the suppression of human rights in China at the forthcoming UN human rights conference in Geneva. [17959]

Mr. David Davis: We continue to be deeply concerned about the human rights situation in China. We and our European Union partners are at present discussing the possibility of co-sponsoring a resolution on human rights in China at the forthcoming UN Commission on Human Rights.

Wei Jingsheng

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what inquiries about the health of the Chinese pro-democracy activist Wei Jingsheng have been made recently by Her Majesty's embassy in Beijing. [17963]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary expressed the Government's deep concern about this case during his talks with the Chinese Premier and Foreign Minister in Peking on 9 and 10 January. The case was also discussed during the second series of meetings under the EU/China human rights dialogue in Peking on 22 and 23 January.

We have urged the Chinese authorities to show clemency in this case, and to allow Mr. Wei's early release.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what severance pay will be paid to the present governor of Hong Kong on his retirement; and what proportion of that sum will be tax free. [18084]

Mr. David Davis: The term of employment applying to the present governor, and to others employed in the Hong Kong Government on contract terms including the governor's predecessors, provide for him to receive, upon the completion of the period of his appointment in Hong Kong, a gratuity of 25 per cent. of his total basic salary in lieu of pension. The governor's gratuity would be paid by the Hong Kong Government and would not be subject to tax.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of non-ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17483]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The lists for the years 1992 to 1995 have been placed in the Libraries of the House. Recovery of data for the years 1990–92 would incur disproportionate costs. A list of standard delegations accompanying my right hon. and learned Friend, the Foreign Secretary or one of his Ministers is also placed in the Libraries of the House. The need for officials to accompany Ministers is reviewed periodically on a case-by-case basis. To provide further details of the composition of each delegation, its function and its cost would also incur a disproportionate expense of public funds.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 26 and 27 February. [18508]

Mr. David Davis: The A points listed in document 5157/96, which will be deposited in the Libraries of the House as soon as it is available, were approved except item 15.

The Council took note of the European Parliament resolutions in documents 4306/96 and 4709/96, PE-RE 6 and PE-RE 9. Copies of these documents will be deposited in the Libraries of the House as soon as they are available.

The Council discussed former Yugoslavia and agreed conclusions on a regional approach, refugees and reconstruction. The Council invited the Commission to prepare, at the right time, negotiating directives for agreements with all the countries of the region which meet the necessary conditions and accept the regional approach.

The Council discussed preparations for the European Council in Turin and the practical organisation of the intergovernmental conference.

The Council discussed the proposed mandate for an EU/South Africa trade agreement but failed to reach a decision. The matter was referred to COREPER for further work. Her Majesty's Government continue to believe that it is essential that the EU fulfils its commitments to agree a mandate for a free trade agreement with South Africa as soon as possible.

The Council discussed a draft mandate for a new EU/Mexico agreement. The presidency gave a brief situation report on the preparations for the forthcoming Asia/Europe meeting on 1 and 2 March in Bangkok. The Council approved the appointment of a special envoy, Aldo Ajello, to the great lakes region for six months. The Council discussed Greece-Turkey relations.

The Council discussed EU policy towards the Baltic sea region. The Council agreed a one-off 5 m ecu contribution from the EU budget to the Korean Energy Development Organisation.

The Council discussed the own resources decision and noted that formal ratification by the Netherlands Parliament could follow shortly after approval by the First Chamber on 16 April. This would complete the national ratifications

In the margins of the Council, the EU/Morocco Euro-Mediterranean Association agreement and the EC/Morocco fisheries agreement were signed. Mr. Davis signed the association agreement on behalf of the UK. On 27 February there were association councils with Slovakia and Romania; and a joint meeting with the Foreign Ministers of the associated central European countries.

No votes were taken at this Council.

Departmental Meetings (Claude de Kemoularia)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions representatives of his Department or employees of other Departments of Her Majesty's Government met Claude de Kemoularia of Banque Paribas during 1995 and 1996; and if he will make a statement. [18509]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Members of the Paris embassy have had occasional contact with Mr. de Kemoularia during the period in question. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary is not aware of any contacts he may have had with other Government Departments.

British Tourists

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines are given to British tour operators on the removal of British tourists from areas abroad where there is a reported threat to health or safety. [18309]

Mr. David Davis: Tour operators have access to FCO travel advice on threats to personal safety arising from political unrest, lawlessness, violence, natural disasters and epidemics. When the safety of British tourists overseas is threatened, British consular staff liaise closely with tour operators to ensure that effective action is taken.

If the local security situation is serious enough for evacuation of British nationals to be considered, consuls advise tour operators to withdraw their tourists as soon as possible. The Department of Health takes the lead on threats to the health of British travellers abroad, liaising as necessary with the Federation of Tour Operators, the Association of British Travel Agents and British consular staff.

HEALTH

EDS Ltd.

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those contracts his Department currently holds with EDS indicating for each the (a) date of inception, (b) value and (c) duration. [17444]

Mr. Horam: The Department has no contracts with EDS.

Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what extra resources he is making available to social services departments towards the implementation of the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995; [17546]

(2) what estimates he has made of the cost in 1996–97 of (a) carers' assessments and (b) consequential extra support services under the provisions of the Carers (Recognition and Services) Act 1995. [17548]

Mr. Bowis: The Act should not involve significant extra costs. It enshrines in statute many of the principles of good practice which we had recommended local authorities follow.

NHS Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the employing authorities whose payments represent the additional receipts to the NHS superannuation scheme accounts in respect of early retirements. [17804]

Mr. Malone: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 1 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question as it falls within my area of responsibility.

The employing authorities whose payments represent the additional receipts to the NHS Superannuation Scheme accounts in respect of early retirements are as follows:

NHS Administration

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many senior managers in the NHS have either resigned after being requested to do so or had their contracts terminated and were appointed to another post within the NHS within (a) five years, (b) three years, (c) two years and (d) 12 months. [17544]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Bristol Oncology Centre

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that patients turned away from the Bristol oncology centre due to its financial circumstances are promptly readmitted and receive the necessary care. [17943]

Mr. Horam: Patients are not being refused treatment. All emergency and urgent treatments are continuing as normal, and curative treatment is not affected. Patients requiring palliative care for non-curable conditions will be treated in the community by general practitioners, district nurses and St. Peters hospice. Help and advice will be provided from the palliative care team at the oncology centre.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what priorities govern the treatment of patients form (a) Avon, (b) Somerset, (c) Dorset and (d) Gloucester at the Bristol oncology centre. [17889]

Mr. Horam: Decisions regarding what priorities govern the treatment of patients at the Bristol oncology centre are the responsibility of the clinicians managing their care.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current work of the Bristol oncology centre in respect of treating cancer patients with chemotherapy and radiotherapy. [18062]

Mr. Horam: This is a mater for Avon Health Commission and the United Bristol Health Care national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact the respective chairmen, Mrs. Martha Perriam and Mr. Robert McKinlay for more information.

Kirby-Harris Libel Case

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, column 25, if the non-executive members of Cornwall Health Care trust sought legal advice from (a) the regional health authority and (b) the Department of Health before releasing the statements which resulted in the Kirby-Harris libel case. [18081]

Mr. Malone: It is not the function of the regional health authority or the Department of Health to provide legal advice to national health service trusts or their directors. Mrs. Kirby-Harris has accepted that the publication of the statement was not authorised by the non-executives.

Bogus Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue guidance to NHS employers on how to prevent the employment of bogus doctors. [17953]

Mr. Malone: Guidance was issued in June 1987, PM(87)7, and updated in November 1992, EL(92)84. We are committed to reviewing the guidance in June 1996.

Public Bodies (Women Appointees)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he gives to health authorities and health trusts on the number of women appointees as non-executive directors. [18304]

Mr. Malone: An equal opportunities policy is adopted in the selection process for appointments. Under the Opportunity 2000 women in the national health service initiative we have set a goal to increase the number of women appointed to health authorities and NHS trusts to 43 per cent. by 30 September 1998. Currently the national percentages of women non-executive appointments is 41.62 per cent. for NHS trusts, 51.45 per cent. for district health authorities and 36.6 per cent. for family health services authorities.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of the non-ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17491]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), then Minister for Health, gave the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on 3 November 1993 at columns 222–24 for information covering the period April 1992 to mid-October 1993.

Information on the dates, destinations and purpose of visits made by my right hon. Friend and ministerial colleagues since mid-October 1993 is shown in the tables. The total cost of overseas travel by Ministers and private secretaries in each financial year is also shown.

Information on visits between 1990 and 9 April 1992 and full information on officials accompanying Ministers could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Deaths (Drugs)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 34, in how many cases of deaths in which Ecstasy was involved, Ecstasy was identified as the main cause of death; and what other legal or illegal drugs were involved. [17844]

Mr. Bowis: The table shows the number of deaths registered in England and Wales from 1990 to 1994 from drug poisoning where Ecstasy was the only drug mentioned.

Year	Deaths
1990	1
1991	6
1992	5
1993	12
1994	10

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18138]

Mr. Horam: Civil servants are permitted to undertake and be paid for work outside official time, for example, directorships, if there is no conflict of interest. Staff who disclose relevant interests to their managers do so on the understanding that the declaration, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer. We do not hold central records of these declarations.

British Tourists

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for health what structures are in place to ensure that when (a) the Association of British Travel Agents or (b) the Federation of Tour Operators are advised of possible health and safety hazards to tourists at a resort overseas, customers are informed. [18306]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 December 1995, Official Report, at column 529, which gave details of the Department of Health's agreement with the Association of British Travel Agents about notifying it of outbreaks of disease. The Department now has a similar agreement with the Federation of Tour Operators. Once in receipt of the information, it is for the travel industry to decide when it is appropriate to inform customers.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to ensure that British tour operators' staff working abroad have training in control procedures concerning legionnaires and other infectious diseases; [18311]

(2) what plans he has to review communications concerning outbreaks of serious diseases, between the United Kingdom Government, British tour operators and holiday resort hotels used by United Kingdom tourists; [18312]

(3) what discussions he has had with United Kingdom tour operators in respect of the factors underlying the delay in informing British tourists of the occurrence of legionnaires disease in the Hotel Imbat, Kusadasi, Turkey. [18313]

Mr. Horam: Officials from the Department of Health and the Public Health Laboratory Service are liaising with the Association of British Travel agents and the Federation of Tour Operators to review communications between organisations and clarify what action needs to be taken in response to future reports of travel-related legionnaires disease.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will initiate an inquiry into the role of (a) ABTA and (b) the Federation of Tour Operators in allowing customers to travel to the Hotel Imbat, Kusadasi, Turkey in September 1995. [18314]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health will follow the recommendations of the Public Health Laboratory Service's report, copies of which are available in the Library, into the recommendations into the outbreak of legionnaires disease at the Hotel Imbat, and will review, with United Kingdom tour operators, the exchange of information on outbreaks associated with tourist hotels abroad.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he is taking to monitor whether Public Health Laboratory Service recommendations relating to the Hotel Imbat, Kusadasi, Turkey, in 1995 are carried out by the Turkish authorities; and if he will make a statement; [18307]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that the results of recommendations made by the Public Health Laboratory Service in its report dealing with an outbreak of legionnaires disease at the Hotel Imbat, Kusadasi, Turkey, in 1995 are relayed to potential British visitors. [18308]

Mr. Horam: The Public Health Laboratory Service's report, copies of which are available in the Library, into the outbreak has been sent to the travel industry. The PHLS is in contact with the Turkish authorities through the European working group for legionalla infection to monitor that the recommendations are being followed up. A member of the PHLS investigation team is planning to revisit the Hotel Imbat to monitor that all of the recommendations relating to the hotel itself are carried out. It is for those tour operators who have contracts with the Hotel Imbat to ensure that the hotel has taken the relevant steps to safeguard the health of tourists.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18140]

The Attorney-General: There is no requirement, in the Departments and agency for which I am responsible, for civil servants to report privately held company directorships. However, civil servants faced with a conflict of interest must declare their interest to senior management in accordance with the staff handbook of each Department and agency. Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like other employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer. There are no civil servants in the Departments and agency for which I am responsible who hold directorships of companies for developmental reasons or on an ex officio basis.

DEFENCE

Married Quarters Discounted Sale Scheme

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to replace the married quarters discounted sale scheme for regular members of Her Majesty's armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [19077]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The purpose of the married quarters discounted sale scheme has been to assist service personnel into home ownership. It has been popular, but has over the years necessarily helped a relatively modest number of personnel. This, combined with the proposed sale of the married quarters estate, has resulted in consideration of a replacement scheme.

We now intend to replace the MQDSS with an interest-free advance of pay for house purchase which is based on the current scheme available in the Royal Navy. The replacement scheme will come into effect on 1 August 1996.

The scheme will allow us to target resources more effectively to assist retention. It will be available to all regular Army and RAF personnel aged 35 and over, on pensionable engagements or commissions. The advance will be a maximum of £8,500 and will be repayable over 10 years of service. The qualifying age for the Royal Navy scheme will reduce from 25 to 23 years.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of non-ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17490]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Yes. A list is being prepared and will be placed in the Library shortly.

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18134]

Mr. Arbuthnot: There are five MOD civil servants who hold non-executive directorships arranged by the Department for career developmental reasons. These directorships are with the following companies:

Northern British Newsprint

Rank Organisation

Marks and Spencer Subsidiary Board

Avery Berkel

Thorn Security.

These appointments are unpaid, although in accordance with Cabinet Office guidelines, individuals may accept payment of expenses incurred while carrying out the duties of the directorship.

Other staff may have privately held non-executive directorships, for example, the board of a family company. If there is no conflict of interest and the duties are performed outside official time there would normally be no bar to an individual holding a directorship and being paid accordingly.

Greenham Common

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decision has been made with regard to the sale of Greenham Common to the Greenham Common Management Company Ltd. [18310]

Mr. Soames: No decision has yet been reached on the sale of Greenham Common.

Dartmoor National Park

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the advertised usage in days of (a) Okehampton, (b) Merrivale and (c) Willsworthy ranges in Dartmoor national park for live firing in the year ended December 1995; and how many days firing took place. [18350]

Mr. Soames: The advertised usage in days for the ranges in question was 78 days for Okehampton, 118 days for Merrivale and 145 days at Willsworthy. The following actual firing days took place: 53 at Okehampton, 93 at Merrivale and 107 at Willsworthy.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he had with the secretary to the Cabinet concerning the Government's response to the Scott inquiry; and where and when such consultations took place. [16604]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 22 February]: Successive Governments have not disclosed the nature or the specific sources of the advice they receive from the civil service.

Kentigern House, Glasgow

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department has received in relation to arrangements, in the case of fire, for disabled employees at Kentigern house in Glasgow not to be evacuated but to go to facilities described as fire-proof; what reply has been made; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement. [17916]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 29 February 1996]: At local health and safety and Whitley committees, the trades unions have asked what arrangements are available for staff in wheelchairs in the event of fire and the arrangements have been explained to them. The provision of fire protection areas, which can serve as refuges for disabled people including those injured in the incident itself, is in accordance with regulations and standards which apply equally to the Ministry of Defence, other Government Departments and the private sector.

The trades unions are content with both existing and proposed arrangements. Action will continue, in consultation with the trades unions, to improve emergency evacuation procedures and to ensure that planned building re-development meets current building regulations and British standards.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cold weather payments were made in the winter of 1994–95; and what was the total amount paid. [17538]

Mr. Roger Evans: During the period 1 November 1994 to 31 March 1995, 10,969 cold weather payments were made totalling £76,786.

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18148]

Mr. Burt: Under the rules set out in the civil service management code, a copy of which is held in the Library, staff must report business interests, including directorships, which might conflict with their work in the Department. Any such details are treated as confidential and no central record is kept.

In-work Benefit Project (Newcastle)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was, for each year since the project's inception, the cost of the in-work benefit project in Newcastle, breaking down costs separately for the Benefits Agency and each other agency involved. [18240]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 29 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what was, for each year since the project's inception, the cost of the in-work benefit project in Newcastle, breaking down costs separately for the Benefits Agency (BA) and each other agency involved.

The costs incurred by the BA's Newcastle office for their involvement in the In Work Benefit Project are as follows:

1992/93: £15057.00

1993/94: £15208.00

1994/95: £15520.00.

Salary costs for one Executive Officer on full time secondment to City Challenge (sponsors of the In Work Benefit Project).

Due to the success of the project the need for advice and information has diminished and the post is now on a part time basis. Therefore, from April 1995 to date the cost is approximately £7500.

During 1993/94 a high level evaluation of the Project was carried out at a cost of £32,000. This cost was shared equally between Employment Service, Benefits Agency and Newcastle City Council.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate in 1996–97 and 1997–98 (a) the cost of producing and posting the child benefit statement sent to recipients each year showing the general increase in benefit rates payable as a result of the benefit uprating, and (b) the cost of new notifications of entitlement. [18099]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 29 February 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary question asking if he will estimate in 1996–97 and 1997–98 (a) the cost of producing and posting the child benefit statement sent to recipients each year showing the general increase in benefit rates payable as a result if the benefit uprating, and (b) the cost of new notifications of entitlement.

The estimated costs in 1996–97 and 1997–98 for producing and posting Child Benefit statements as a result of a benefit uprating are £546,185 and £556,562 respectively.

The estimated costs in 1996–97 and 1997–98 of producing and posting new notifications of entitlement are £227,200 and £226,404 respectively.

These estimated costs are based on current day prices.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Hain: to ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take in respect of Sir Richard Scott's conclusion in section K8.16 that Ministers have an obligation to provide information to Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [16949]

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the speeches made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and myself on 26 February.

Compliance Cost Assessments

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the cost in each case to businesses and others of complying with the regulations set out in "Compliance Cost Assessments: 1 January 1995 to 30 June 1995". [17954]

Mr. Freeman: The compliance cost assessment procedure requires Departments to show a number of different costs including recurring and non-recurring costs for a typical business and for all businesses affected by the proposed regulation. Details for the period 1 January 1995 to 30 June 1995 can be found in the individual compliance cost assessments, copies of which are available in the House Libraries.

Special Advisers

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what account is taken of Ministers' pay in relation to the pay of special advisers. [18503]

Mr. Willets: No account is taken of Ministers' pay in determining the pay of special advisers.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many responses he has received to the Cabinet Office news release on 28 December 1995—Office of Public Service 315/95—from (a) members of the public, (b) the self-employed, (c) small business men and (d) company directors; and which rules and regulations they each identified as suitable for deregulation. [18351]

Mr. Freeman: I have received 60 responses to the news release and a further 420 responses from members of the Federation of Small Businesses in response to my invitation to write to me about regulations which are hampering their business. The 60 responses are mostly from small business people and members of the public. In the majority of cases the responses do not identify specific rules or regulations but the main issues raised were planning and building; metrication; health and safety; various licensing issues; and VAT. I shall reply to each letter individually.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of non-ministerial members of the delegation and (d) the names of non-ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17496]

Mr. Freeman: Details of the information requested for the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Parliamentary Secretary have been placed in the Library of the House. The information covers the Office of Public Service and Science—April 1992 to July 1995—and the Office of Public Service from July 1995.

The Deputy Prime Minister has made no overseas visits.

Civil Service (Employment Law)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what anomalies remain since United Kingdom law relating to employment in the civil service was brought into line with EC law in 1991. [19076]

Mr. Freeman: The European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991 brought United Kingdom law into line with European Community requirements by permitting nationals of other member states to apply for certain civil service posts, but a number of anomalies remain. One of these is that citizens of the Republic of Ireland—and of Commonwealth countries—are currently eligible for recruitment to a wide range of posts in the home civil service, including those which constitute in EC treaty terms, whereas nationals of other European Economic Area countries are eligible only for those posts which do not constitute such employment.

"employment in the public service"

It is clear that we need to amend the current rules. Recruitment schemes with closing dates for the receipt of applications on or after 1 June 1996 for posts which constitute will therefore be reserved for United Kingdom nationals and will not be open to Irish or Commonwealth citizens. Applications from citizens of these countries will from 1 June be treated on the same basis as those from citizens from other European Economic Area countries.

"employment in the public service"

The change will not affect the position of citizens of the Republic of Ireland and of Commonwealth countries already in post on 31 May 1996. Neither will it affect the position of candidates from those countries for recruitment schemes with a closing date for the receipt of applications before 1 June 1996.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland is making arrangements for changes to the rules for entry to the Northern Ireland civil service which will achieve the same position there in the same timescale.

Seconded Staff

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the individuals, by name and company, who are engaged on temporary secondments in the Cabinet Office and Office of Public Service; and if he will list the type and nature of the secondment. [14675]

Mr. Willetts [pursuant to his reply, 16 February 1996, c. 728]: I regret that the list of staff seconded into the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service, from industry and commerce was incorrect. It should have included Ms R. Haddow. The correct list is as follows:

Name	Company
Mr. M. Blessing	PA Consulting
Mr. S. Culhane	Lloyds Bank
Mr. M. B. De Ferranti	GEC/Marconi Ltd.
Mrs. L Emin	Cable and Wireless plc
Ms M. Guiot	British Telecom
Mr. S. Greenstreet	Coopers and Lybrand
Ms R. Haddow	Binder Hamlyn
Mr. A. Harris	Clifton Corporate Services Ltd.
Mr. S. Hoffman Womersley	Shandwick Communications Ltd.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity Generation

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of gas-fired electricity generation in the United Kingdom currently; and what the estimated capacity is likely to be based on section 36 consents by (a) the end of 1998 and (b) 2000. [17198]

Mr. Page: At present, combined cycle gas turbines—CCGT—provide 9.5 GW of electricity generating capacity. Another 5.7 GW of CCGT capacity is currently under construction and should be completed by 1998. A further 7.6 GW of CCGT capacity has received section 36 consent and applications totalling 2.8 GW of CCGT capacity are currently under consideration. The decisions on whether to proceed with construction and its timing are matters for the companies concerned.

The Department does not prepare forecasts of electricity capacity, but in the scenarios produced to assess energy related emissions of CO_2—published in Energy Paper 65—it was assumed that, in the year 2000, CCGT capacity would be in the range 16 to 18 GW.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he is taking under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1990 to ensure diversity of supply in the electricity generating industry. [17199]

Mr. Page: In considering an application for consent under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1990, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade would as a general rule treat matters such as the choice of fuel to be used and type of plant as commercial matters for the applicant concerned.

Fireworks

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were killed or injured as a result of accidents involving fireworks in each year since 1990. [18298]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of people killed or who attended an accident and emergency department as a result of accidents involving fireworks in the last five years in Great Britain are as follows:

Year	Injuries	Fatalities
1991	723	0
1992	942	0
1993	1,058	0
1994	1,574	2
1995	[1]—	[1]—

North Sea

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was spent by (a) the previous Department of Energy and (b) the Department of Trade and Industry on research work into the decommissioning of fixed installations in the North sea in the past five years. [17840]

Mr. Eggar: Research into the decommissioning of offshore oil and gas installations on the UK continental shelf is funded primarily by industry. In the past five years neither the Department of Energy nor the Department of Trade and Industry has commissioned research related directly to decommissioning. My Department is currently considering the scope of a generic study relating to the best practicable environmental option for the decommissioning of installations in the southern sector of the North sea.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to publish new guidelines pertaining to decommissioning of North sea installations in the oil and gas sector; and what estimate has been made of the number of fixed installations requiring to be decommissioned up to 2005. [17839]

Mr. Eggar: I expect to publish guidance notes for industry on the decommissioning of offshore installations after I have had the opportunity to consider the report of the House of Lords Science and Technology sub-committee II on the subject.

Depending upon field performance and economic factors at the time, current estimates indicate that some 40 fixed offshore installations on the UK continental shelf could be decommissioned by 2005.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department intends to spend on research into the removal of drill workings in the North sea. [17838]

Mr. Eggar: A study has recently been commissioned to assess the environmental implications of the presence of drilling cuttings piles. The cost of this study will be shared by Government and industry. Future research into the removal of drill cuttings in the North sea will be influenced by the findings of the study and funds will be made available as required. The Government do not expect to incur high expenditure as the research should be primarily funded by industry.

German Construction Sector

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the impact on the employment of British construction firms and workers in Germany of the recent decision by the German Government to enforce common pay and conditions on all workers in the German construction sector. [17962]

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is too early to assess the likely impact of the new law but I shall continue to monitor the situation carefully.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the work force is covered by the minimum wage in each EU state according to the latest available evidence. [16282]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The following table shows the latest available evidence on the proportions of the work force covered by the minimum wage in a number of countries in the form requested:

Country	Coverage of national minimum wage
Netherlands	All employees
Luxembourg	All employees
Spain	All employees except civil servants and local government officers
France	All employees
Greece	45–65 per cent.
Portugal	All employees over 18

Petroleum Coke

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action is being taken to ensure householders are warned of the dangers of the storage and use of pet coke. [17945]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am not aware of a particular hazard associated with the storage of petroleum coke. Suppliers of this material have been advised, in fulfilling their obligations under the General Products Safety Regulations 1994, to provide clear written instructions to anyone buying petroleum coke for domestic use.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16817]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 27 February 1996]: I will ascertain the information requested and write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Statistics (Gender Breakdown)

Ms Jowell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department is taking to collect statistics broken down by gender where relevant. [17690]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 29 February 1996]: Statistics concerning staff employed in my Department are normally based on pay and personnel records which include information on gender. Statistical information about personnel can therefore usually be broken down by gender.

The regular statistical surveys run by the DTI are business surveys, where questions on gender are not relevant. In addition, statistics on individual insolvencies are collected from official receivers' offices. There are no plans to break these statistics down by gender. The home accident and European home leisure accident surveillance systems collect gender statistics on home and leisure accidents.

Small Businesses

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from small business organisations concerning companies purporting to offer advisory services about Government and European grants available to small businesses; what proposals he has to regulate the activities of such companies; and if he will make a statement. [18130]

Mr. Page [holding answer 29 February 1996]: I have received representations from a number of hon. Members and from one small business organisation concerning companies offering advisory services about Government and European grants available to small businesses.

There are many reputable private sector providers of grant information in addition to organisations such as local business links in England, business connect in Wales, together with local enterprise companies and business shops in Scotland, which offer easy access to such information. However, I remain concerned about the activities of some grant consultants and the DTI is doing what it can to stop such practices.

Misleading claims made by sales people are a trading standards matter, and my Department is assisting trading standards departments in taking forward their inquiries. This is leading to direct action. For example, trading standards officers in Birmingham are pursuing inquiries under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 against a company known as Business Grants Advisory Group Ltd, operating in their area. My Department has also recently issued a press notice advising companies how to avoid being taken in by so called grant "cowboys" and how to find a reputable consultant.

I do not believe further regulation is necessary or desirable.

TREASURY

Customs and Excise Management Act

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will carry out a review of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979. [17223]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: On 15 June, Official Report, column 627, I announced in the House that Customs and Excise had set up a three-year wide-ranging review of the various Customs enactments as part of the Government's wider deregulation drive and this review is in progress. Part of this review is to rationalise and simplify both existing and new Customs provisions into consolidation Acts, including a replacement for the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979.

Furthermore, on 26 February 1996, Official Report columns 596-97, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced in the House that the Government largely accept the recommendations of the Scott report in relation to Customs legislation and have asked for these recommendations to be implemented subject only to further consideration of some detailed technical legal matters.

Tax Reliefs

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total tax relief, expressed in terms of revenue lost to public funds in each of the last three years benefiting (a) partners and (b) closed company men. [18174]

Mr. Jack: No special reliefs are available to individuals in partnerships or to directors or participators in close companies. Information is not available about the total value of reliefs given to these two groups of taxpayers.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals declared themselves as partners for the purposes of tax relief in each of the last three years. [18173]

Mr. Jack: According to the latest information available from the "Survey of Personal Incomes", the number of individuals regarded as partners for tax purposes was about 1.3 million in 1993–94 and in each of the previous two years. Individuals who carry on business in partnership are not entitled to any tax reliefs other than those they would be entitled to if they were in business on their own account.

Written-off Debts

Ms Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the value of debt to Government written off in each privatisation since 1979. [18487]

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor to the hon. Member for North-West Durham (Ms Armstrong) on 23 March 1995, Official Report, columns 286–88.

Profit-related Pay

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Treasury of profit-related pay schemes in lost public revenues. [18315]

Mr. Jack: Estimates of the cost of income tax relief for profit-related pay schemes in 1994–95 and 1995–96 are published in table 1.6 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1995", a copy of which is in the Library.

Tax Law

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress HM Customs and Excise is making on simplification of tax law. [19022]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Inland Revenue produced a report on tax simplification in December 1995 under Section 160 of the Finance Act 1995 entitled "The Path to Tax Simplification". HM Customs and Excise (Customs) shares with the Inland Revenue the objective of seeking to simplify legislation and reduce burdens on business.

The two departments have already started working closely together wherever possible to reduce burdens, particularly on small and new businesses. Early benefits include, for new businesses, a joint leaflet, "Starting Your Own Business" to help them assimilate information on VAT, income tax and national insurance; the provision of a joint notification form for business start-up and the availability of joint seminars. Other developments include the provision of each other's leaflets at inquiry points and the extension last year of the Inland Revenue independent adjudicator's role to cover complaints against Customs. A trial is also taking place in Scotland to assess the value to business of a single low-cost telephone number for inquiries about taxation issues.

However, because of significant differences in their role, Customs is following a different approach to simplification. Like the Revenue, Customs collects taxes for the UK Government: VAT and excise duties—oils, tobacco and alcohol; insurance premium tax; and, in due course, landfill tax. Unlike the Revenue, however, Customs also has other obligations. Customs collects customs duties for the EC; operates a range of duty relief and suspension regimes; protects society and UK trade by operating import and export prohibitions and restrictions; and collects trade statistics.

The separate legislation—either UK or EC or both—for each of the taxes operated by Customs creates complexity for business through the different requirements for similar activities, such as registration. Many of Customs' legal requirements also apply to non-fiscal regimes such as the collection of trade statistics or licensing. Altogether, Customs legislation encompasses over 40 Acts of Parliament and more than 500 statutory instruments, together with over 200 Community instruments.

Customs recognises that these different legal requirements impose costs on business, and the importance of removing or reducing them, wherever possible, across nearly 50 duty and suspension regimes it operates. In some cases, complexities are created by exemptions and special rules introduced to meet the needs of businesses. Where appropriate, existing reliefs will need to be retained. but keeping tax legislation simple may well mean resisting the introduction of new reliefs.

Customs is working through a rigorous deregulation programme, which has already included repealing a number of unnecessary or redundant provisions. Clause 20 of the Finance Bill is an example of a current proposal here. Likewise, legal consolidation contributes to deregulation, for example The Value Added Tax Regulations 1995, where 62 sets of existing regulations were brought together into a single document.

As a Government we have encouraged the EC to deregulate. Some EC law, such as the Community customs code, is directly applicable and wherever opportunities are identified, Customs presses the Commission to simplify regulations. In co-operation with UK trade representatives, Customs has contributed significantly to a review of inward processing relief which, subject to agreement by a majority of member states, should result in simplification.

Similarly, we have to have regard to existing Community obligations in relation to a number of fiscal regimes. Nevertheless, there have also been a number of recent simplification initiatives. The measure to simplify the EC VAT system is one which the UK has actively encouraged. Another is the relaxation in the financial security requirements for excise warehousekeepers achieved following UK representations.

As I announced in June 1995, Customs has started a project, known as LEGIS, with two goals. The first is to converge and simplify common procedures and rationalise individual enactments. The second is to simplify the structure of the law by consolidating the revised legal provisions. This will reduce burdens for businesses which have dealings with Customs on more than one tax or relief regime and result in a more coherent body of law for the benefit of taxpayers, practitioners and revenue officers alike.

Customs has identified the main processes which it needs to review in order to assess the scope for rationalising policies, procedures and legislation across all the tax and other regimes. These are: registration and authorisation, declaration, payment and repayment, reviews and appeals, compliance assurance, debt management, civil penalties, and offence procedures.

The reviews are under way. I expect most of them to be completed by the end of the year and the remainder to be completed early in 1997. Customs will consult business on emerging findings later in the year and I expect to introduce simplification and deregulatory measures flowing from the project as soon as is practicable thereafter.

Press Gallery Writing Rooms

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Ministers in his Department entered the writing rooms of the Press Gallery on 15 February. [16471]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 1 February 1996]: None.

BSA Tools

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if access has been granted to Iraqi assets frozen in the United Kingdom in pursuance of a legal action against the Birmingham-based company BSA Tools. [16505]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 26 February 1996]: The Bank of England advises that Iraqi funds were released on application to pay expenses incurred in pursuance of a legal action against BSA Tools, which was eventually settled out of court. This is in accordance with long established policy, where sanctions have been imposed, of allowing access to frozen funds to pay the cost of legal representation.

SCOTLAND

Special Protection Areas

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete the designation of special protection areas under article 4 of EU directive 79/409. [16268]

Mr. Kynoch: An accelerated classification programme for Scotland is now in place. On current estimates the UK's special protection area network should be virtually completed in the year 2000.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what guidance he (a) has issued and (b) plans to issue to planning authorities to ensure that current or proposed developments are consistent with the requirements of EU directives on the conservation of birds (79/409) and natural habitats (82/43); [16269]

(2) what guidance he has given to the skiing industry and local authorities on his policy towards protecting mountain areas from environmentally inappropriate development and the requirements under international obligations to protect the flora and fauna of such areas. [16270]

Mr. Kynoch: Comprehensive guidance on the implementation of the habitats and birds directives is contained in circular No. 6/1995 which was issued to Scottish regional, island and district councils by the Scottish Office environment department in March 1995. A draft national planning policy guideline for skiing developments in Scotland was issued by the Scottish Office for consultation on 19 February 1996. When finalised the NPPG will supersede existing guidelines published in 1984. The draft NPPG reflects the Government's policies for both the environment and skiing interests.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the expansion of provision for pre-fives within the voluntary sector that will arise from the voucher initiative. [17537]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: In the voluntary sector, as elsewhere, the expansion of provision will follow demand.

Grants (Voluntary Bodies)

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has reached a decision on the allocation to voluntary bodies of grants under the special grants (environmental) programme in 1996–97. [19145]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am pleased to have been able to offer 53 individual grants totalling £450,000 to 46 voluntary bodies in Scotland to assist them in carrying out their valuable environmental conservation, improvement and education work. The sums available in the special grants (environmental) programme in 1996–97 match those available in 1995–96. This continued level of support reflects the Government's commitment to the voluntary sector, and its role in carrying out the Government's environmental objectives.

Ministerial Accountability

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to paragraph K8.1 of the Scott report relating to ministerial accountability, what additional measures he proposes to ensure his Department's compliance with paragraph 27 of "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". [17316]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 26 February 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the speech made by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 February 1996, Official Report, columns 589–604.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many hectares and what proportion of Forestry Commission land in Scotland is (a) leased, (b) held in dominion directum and (c) held in vassal; [17381]

(2) how many hectares and what proportion of Forestry Commission land in England is (a) leasehold and (b) freehold; [17382]

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Sex Education

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what circumstances parents have the right to withdraw their children from classes in maintained schools in which sexually explicit materials are used. [16749]

Mr. Paice: Parents can withdraw their children from all or part of sex education provided beyond the requirements of national curriculum science. The parental right of withdrawal applies to all pupils attending maintained schools.

Young People (Formal Qualification)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people aged 16 to 24 years in (a) Coventry and (b) the west midlands have no formal qualification. [17200]

Mr. Paice: Estimates from the summer 1995 labour force survey show that 21 per cent. of people aged 16 to 24 years in the west midlands metropolitan area reported that they had no formal qualifications. Data for Coventry are not available.

Woodland Management

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps further to encourage coppice management. [16810]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 February 1996]: We have recently taken steps to encourage coppice management, particularly by helping to develop markets for coppice timber. The Forestry Commission has, for example, launched a sales magazine in partnership with East Sussex council, organised seminars, and appointed a market development officer.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Government policy towards woodlands management and woodland conservation. [16811]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 February 1996]: One of the key aims of the Government's forestry policy is the sustainable management of our existing woods and forests. Our policy is set out in detail in "Forestry Policy for Great Britain" and "Sustainable Forestry: The UK Programme", copies of which are in the Library.

Nuclear Reprocessing

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority has to enter into binding agreements for fuel reprocessing at Dounreay in advance of a new authorisation by the chief inspector of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. [17709]

Mr. Richard Page: I have been asked to reply.

The UKAEA has powers to enter into binding arrangements under the provisions of the Atomic Energy Authority Act 1954. The UKAEA enters into binding agreements only for fuel reprocessing at Doureay which it can carry out under current regulatory authorisation.

Tertiary Education Teachers, Northamptonshire

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many full-time equivalent teachers were employed in tertiary education in Northamptonshire in each year since 1979. [17553]

Mr. Robin Squire: The available information on full-time equivalent staff in further and higher education is shown in the table:

Academic years	Further education FTES	Higher education FTES
1987–88[1]	646.8	182.1
1988–89	621.4	183.0

1994–95	[3]621.3	n/a

[3] From 1994–95 onwards, data are being collected by different systems, and the figure does not include as high a proportion of teacher time as the former measure.

Nursery Voucher Scheme, Westminster

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the refusal of a child's parents to participate in the nursery voucher experimental pilot scheme in Westminster will lead to the exclusion of that child from a local education authority nursery school. [17956]

Mr. Robin Squire: A valid nursery education voucher will be necessary for a school to claim grant. It is therefore in the interests both of the parent and the school that all eligible parents apply for vouchers. In the most exceptional cases where a parent does not apply for a voucher, and subject to certain conditions, the headteacher will be able to do so on their behalf. The admissions policies local education authority maintained schools will remain the responsibility for the LEA or the governing body as the case may be.

Employment Agencies (Insurance)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what statutory provisions cover the requirement for persons supplied by employment agencies to clients under contracts for service to possess adequate insurance in the event of claims for liability incurred in the execution of such contracts; and if she will make a statement. [17353]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 27 February 1996]: I have been asked to reply.

There are no statutory requirements for insurance in the circumstance described where the contract is for service. However, if the contract is one of service, an employer is required to insure against liability for personal injury or disease sustained in the course of employment.

WALES

Bridges

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of (a) bridges on trunk roads and (b) bridges on country roads which require strengthening to carry 40-tonne lorries; and what is his estimate of the total cost of undertaking this for (a) and (b). [17227]

Mr. Hague: It is estimated that 160 trunk road—including the M4 motorway—bridges will require strengthening. This work is estimated to cost £20 million of which £6 million has been expended to date.

Local authorities are responsible for bridges on non-trunk roads.

Vandalism

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures his Department has adopted to combat vandalism; and if he will make a statement. [17378]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has adopted a number of measures to combat vandalism. In 1994 we published a good practice guide with the safe neighbourhoods unit. We have urged housing authorities to fill empty properties as quickly as possible, to reduce potential for vandalism. The estate partnership programme provides an opportunity for authorities to introduce anti-vandalism measures, and the Welsh Office has approved strategic development scheme grants totalling over £3 million for some 40 crime prevention-related schemes in 1995–96 and 1996–97. The current Housing Bill also contains proposals which are designed to combat the problem.

Mostyn Docks

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the planning application for the development at Mostyn docks, Mostyn, Clwyd was (a) first presented to Delyn borough council, (b) called in by his Department, (c) considered by the public inquiry and (d) completed at public inquiry; when the report was presented to his Department; and when he plans to announce his decision. [17046]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The application currently before the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Transport was received by Delyn borough council on 16 December 1994 and called in on 7 March 1995. The public local inquiry was held between 6 July and 8 August 1995 and the inspector's report was received by the Department on 7 November 1995. A decision will be issued as soon as possible.

Chungwha Picture Tubes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of the package offered by his Department to Chungwha Picture Tubes; and if he will make a statement. [17733]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The potential package of support discussed with the company, the detail of which must remain confidential, was the best that could be made available for the location in Wales considered by the company.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department was informed that Chungwha Picture Tubes would not be investing in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17740]

Mr. Jones: The company's position became clear at the end of August last year. Whilst the project will not be going ahead in Wales, I am delighted that the United Kingdom, rather than one of our other competitors for inward investment, will benefit from this investment.

Employment (Overseas Companies)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people are employed by companies from (a) Canada and (b) Australia in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [17525]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Canadian owned manufacturing companies employ 2,870 people in Wales and Australian owned manufacturing companies employ 670 people in Wales. They form a small but important part of Wales' inward investment success.

Siemens and Samsung

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations were made by his Department to the Invest in Britain Bureau concerning recent projects with special reference to Siemens and Samsung; and if he will make a statement. [17730]

Mr. Hague: My Department and the Welsh Development Agency are in regular contact with the Invest in Britain Bureau. Siemens and Samsung chose locations elsewhere in the United Kingdom which met their particular requirements.

A465

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the construction companies currently working on the A465 Aberdulais to Glynneath project. [17565]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The main contractor on the A465 Aberdulais to Glynneath scheme is Alfred McAlpine Construction Ltd.

Welsh Language

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 56, if he will publish the views expressed to him by the Welsh Language Board. [17769]

Mr. Hague: The views of the Chairman of the Welsh Language Board on the European charter for regional or minority languages were made public in a press release dated 29 April 1995. Views expressed by Welsh Language Board officials in discussion with my officials were consistent those expressed by Lord Elis Thomas.

Inward Investment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representation Wales has on the Invest in Britain Bureau; and if he will make a statement. [17808]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Development Agency is represented on the Committee on Overseas Promotion. There is also regular dialogue and contact with the bureau by both my Department and the Welsh Development Agency.

Employment

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list his Department's estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time, (i) males and (ii) females in employment in agriculture, forestry and fishing in (1) 1995, (2) 1992 and (3) 1990 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and if he will make a statement; [16750]

(2) if he will list his Department's latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time females in employment in construction in (i) 1995, (ii) 1994 and (iii) 1993 within the area covered by the valleys initiative; and if he will make a statement; [16755]

(3) if he will list his Department's latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time, (i) males and (ii) females in employment in metal manufacture and chemicals in (1) 1995, (2) 1990 and (3) 1985 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and if he will make a statement; [16763]

(4) if he will list his Department's latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time, (i) males and (ii) females in employment in manufacturing industries in (1) 1995, (2) 1993 and (3) 1991 within areas covered by the valleys initiative; and what percentage change in each category level occurred in 1995 against 1993 and 1991; [16761]

(5) if he will list his Department's latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time males in employment in construction in (i) 1995, (ii) 1994 and (iii) 1992 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and if he will make a statement; [16765]

(6) if he will list the latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time, (i) males and (ii) females in employment in transport and communications in (1) 1990, (2) 1987 and (3) 1984 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and what percentage change in each category level occurred in 1990 against (x) 1987 and (y) 1984; [16764]

(7) if he will list his Department's latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time males in employment in banking, insurance and finance in (i) 1995, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1985 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and what percentage change in each category level occurred in 1995 against (1) 1990 and (2) 1985; [16754]

(8) if he will list his Department's latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time, (i) males and (ii) females in employment in service industries in (1) 1995, (2) 1990, (3) 1985 and (4) 1980 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and if he will make a statement; [16762]

(9) if he will list his Department's latest estimates of (a) full-time and (b) part-time, (i) males and (ii) females in employment in metal goods, engineering and vehicles in (1) 1995, (2) 1992 and (3) 1990 within the areas covered by the valleys initiative; and what percentage change in each category level occurred in (x) 1992 and (y) 1990. [16766]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of full-time and part-time employees by gender and industry at ward level is available from the 1981, 1984, 1987, 1991 and 1993 censuses of employment. The programme for the valleys area can be approximated by 1981 and 1991 wards as detailed in annex 1 and annex 2 of the Welsh Office report "Programme for the Valleys, A Statistical Profile, 1993". The report is available in the Library of the House. Census of employment data are available from the NOMIS database which can be accessed by the staff of the Library of the House. It may not be possible to release all the data due to confidentiality restrictions.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of non-Ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17493]

Mr. Hague: I have arranged for a list containing appropriate details of overseas visits made by Ministers of my Department since 1990, to be placed in the Library of the House. However, information on costs is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants (Company Directors)

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which serving civil servants in his Department are presently directors of companies; and if he will indicate for each (a) the name of the company concerned and (b) if the annual remuneration was (i) £1 to £5,000, (ii) £5,000 to £10,000 and (c) above £10,000. [18152]

Mr. Hague: Staff in my Department are required to declare an interest if they are a director of a company or companies. This requirement is set out in the Welsh Office terms and conditions of service code. Staff who disclose relevant interests do so on the understanding that the declaration, like all employment matters, is confidential between them and their employer.

Oil Pollution

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the threat to migrating birds in those areas affected by oil from the Sea Empress. [18357]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Countryside Council for Wales is collating data on dead and affected birds and it is too early to assess the full effect of the incident on any species. Particular concern has been expressed about the wintering Common Scoter population in Carmarthen bay, where up to 700 dead and over 1,000 oiled birds have been recovered by the RSPCA.

This index replaces that which is bound with Volume 272. Please do not use the index in the bound volume as it has been found to contain a number of errors.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 272

SESSION 1995–96

19th February—1st March 1996

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
